Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, however, argued that there was, what he called, a "technical" necessity for the sales, in other words, that on the finding that there was a debt of Rs. 1,300 due by the husband's estate on the date of the sales, the widow was entitled to sell away a portion of her husband's estate to discharge that debt even though the transaction might have been imprudent. He relied on certain authorities of which I need notice only two namely Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 633, and the judgment in Muthukrishnan Chetty v. Annapurnathachi (2). The passage in Mayne's Hindu Law states that a Hindu widow can validly sell her husband's properties in order to discharge her husband's debts. But I do not think that the learned author intended to lay down that a widow could take advantage of the existence of a few debts to sell away her husband's properties for less than their value in order to get ready money into her own hands and while the debts were being discharged from the usufruct of the lands mortgaged for those debts. The observation in the case of Muthukrishnan Chetty v. Annapurnathachi (2) that "actual demand by a creditor need not be proved to justify a widow in selling her husband's property to discharge his debt," must be read in the light of the facts found in that case, namely, that the debt was carrying interest and the principal amount of Rs. 400 had swollen to a sum of Rs. 700 by the addition of Rs. 300 on account of interest, and that "the widow acted prudently in taking steps to discharge the debt". I do not think that the authorities quoted can support the alienation made by the widow in this case, namely, a wholly imprudent alienation made about 10 years after the husband's death, not with the religious motive of freeing her husband's soul in his after-death state from the burden of his debts, but with a view to get some ready cash into her own hands, the mortgage-creditors having no right to sue for their moneys. Mr. Mayne, in the same paragraph 633, relied on by the appellants' learned Vakil, says that the widow's right to pay debts by alienating the properties must be "exercised bona fide in discharge of the duty to pay her husband's debts" and that when she enters into transactions with the improper motive of even preferring one creditor over another, that creditor would not be entitled to profit by such fraud. On the findings of fact in this case, therefore, it seems to me that the lower Courts were justified in treating the alienations void as against the reversioners.

JAMAHAR KUMARI BIBI v. ASKARAN BOID.

The last question to be considered relates to the appellants' right to claim improvements. The case, Nanjappa Gounden v. Peruma Gounden (3), clearly negatives the defendants' right to claim the value of improvements. Reliance was, however, placed on the Privy Council decision Kidar Nath v. Mathu Mal (1), for the contention that if the market value of the alienated properties had been raised by the improvements made by the alienees, they were entitled to claim the cost of the improvements not exceeding such increase in the market value. Their Lordships of the Privy Council had not in that case to deal with the question whether the alienees, in that case were bona fide alienees who, within the meaning of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, really believed in good faith that they were absolutely entitled to the property. The appeal to their Lordships was made by the alienee who claimed more compensation than the Indian Courts had given him and their Lordships, without calling upon the respondents, dismissed the appeal on the ground that the appellant had not been given less than he was entitled to claim. That case is, therefore, no authority for the proposition that a person who could not have believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property can claim the value of the improvements effected by him.

In the result I would dismiss the second appeals with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—I concur.

—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63, suit under—Method of obtaining review—Burden of proof—Not merely ostensible but real title to be proved.

A plaintiff who is calling in question in a suit contemplated by Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code an adverse decision of a Court, has to show affirmatively that not only the ostensible but the real title also is in him. He cannot discharge the burden of proof cast on him by merely pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which he claims, he must show that they are as good as they look. [p. 860, col. 2.]

Such a suit is to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of the Court, and it is a method of obtaining review. [p. 860, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following Judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chitty, dated the 9th March 1914:—

"This is a suit filed by Jamahar Kumari Bibi, wife of Chatrapat Singh Dugar, for a declaration that she is the absolute owner in her own right of the premises No. 147, Cotton Street, Calcutta, and praying that the said premises maybe released from attachment. On 17th December 1908 the property in suit was attached in execution of a decree dated 1st June 1896 (Suit No. 203 of 1896) against Chatrapat in favour of the present defendants (other than Sripat Singh).

In February 1909 the plaintiff preferred a claim to the property, which was disallowed on 21st June 1909.

She filed this suit on the 27th May 1910. The defendant Askaran Boid, who has acquired the rights of the other Boid defendants, alone defends the suit. His case is that the property is really the property of Chatrapat and the plaintiff is merely Chatrapat's benamidar. It is for the plaintiff to make out her title to the property, and the only question for my determination is whether she has done so. It is conceded that she is the ostensible owner, that the various transfers and dealings with the property have been put through in her name. It is, therefore, incumbent on the contesting defendants to satisfy the Court that, not the plaintiff, but her husband, Chatrapat Singh Dugar, was the real owner.

JAMAHAR KUMARI BIBI V. ASKARAN BOID.

The allegations in paragraphs 1 to 7 of the plaint are admittedly correct, and I need not set out again the facts there stated.

On 2nd March 1896 Saraswati Dasi, widow and executrix of Jadu Lal Mullick, assigned the mortgage decree in Suit No. 253 of 1889 to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,10,000. That decree was against Chatrapat. The Cotton Street property was, with other property, the subject of that suit and was to be brought to sale under the decree. The plaintiff as decree-holder was given leave to bid, and on 5th March 1898 the premises 147, Cotton Street, were knocked down to her for Rs. 50,000. The sale certificate was issued in the name of the plaintiff, and possession was given by the Sheriff on 9th February 1900. No money was actually paid by the plaintiff for the purchase, but the decree was satisfied to that extent. No further steps were taken by the plaintiff to execute that decree, and the balance of her alleged purchase-money, Rs. 60,000, is still outstanding. She has made no effort to recover it from her husband or his property.

The question then arises, where did the Rs. 1,10,000 come from, which was paid to Saraswati Dasi for the decree. The plaintiff says that she obtained it by mortgaging the Suksena zemin-dari to Raja Satis Chandra of Pakur for Rs. 3,00,000. Now, Suksena was undoubtedly so mortgaged on 16th March 1895, but there are various circumstances in this connection which give rise to suspicion. In the first place, the Rs. 3,00,000, were not borrowed for the express purpose of purchasing the decree. There was no talk of the purchase at that time and it was not made until just a year later. The plaintiff gives no explanation of why she borrowed this large sum of Rs. 3,00,000.

Chatrapat, in his evidence here, has stated that it was borrowed to purchase jewellery. No purchase of any jewellery with this money or any part of it is proved, nor is any explanation forthcoming why the plaintiff should require such an enormous amount of jewellery at that time. There is no evidence to show what was done with the remaining Rs. 1,90,000. On the other hand, it is in evidence that about a year before the mortgage the plaintiff had pledged her jewellery to raise Rs. 1,00,000 to meet some pressing claims upon her husband, Chatrapat. There is nothing to show that that jewellery was ever redeemed.

In any case the plaintiff must show her title to Suksena before she can hope that any Court would hold that the Rs. 3,00,000 were her own. This she has attempted to do on several occasions, and on each occasion she has failed. Suksena, it is true, stood in her name, but there can be no doubt whatever that she was merely the b-namidar of her husband.

Her alleged title to it is made out as follows:—

In the year 1880 Luchmipat Singh, the father of Chatrapat Singh, had become very heavily involved in debt. On 13th November 1880 he purported to sell three of the Baluchar properties, the Clock Tower, the family dwelling house and what was known as Dharam Chand's kothi, to his wife, Jarao Kumari, for Rs. 50,000. This was not paid in cash but was said to have been deducted from a debt of Rs. 3,46,000 due to her from her husband. There can be no doubt (and it has been so held) that this was a sham transaction and that the ownership of the Baluchar properties remained with Luchmipat Singh. Two days later, on 15th November 1880, Luchmipat and Chatrapat joined in selling to the Maharaja Sir Jotindra Mohun Tagore four zemin-daris, Poladasi, Suksena, Mamdanipur and Fatehpur Singia, for Rs. 13,50,000. At the same time a putni was granted by the Maharaja of the four zemin-daris in the name of Jarao Kumari at a salami of Rs. 2,04,000. This was said to have been paid by Jarao Kumari by deduction from the book-debt owing to her. It was, however, in reality a putni in favour of Luchmipat Singh. Luchmipat Singh died in May 1886, leaving debts to the extent of 15 or 20 lakhs. To these Chatrapat Singh succeeded and he has ever since been fighting his creditors with varying success. In 1893 an arrangement was made with the Maharaja Tagore with regard to the zemindaris of Suksena and Fatehpur Singia. On 15th August 1913 Jarao Kumari relinquished the putni in Fatehpur Singia to the Maharaja and four days later, on 19th August 1893, the Maharaja executed a deed of gift of Suksena to the plaintiff, Jamahar Kumari. The effect of these deeds was to leave the zemindari of Suksena in the name of the plaintiff, and the putni of Suksena in the name of Jarao Kumari. In September 1894 the Maharaja filed a suit in the Hughli Court to set aside this arrangement. That suit was twice transferred, first to Rajmahal and then to Alipore. Eventually it was withdrawn on the Maharaja being paid Rs. 20,000. The recitals in the deed of transfer of the putni (Exhibit 17) by Jarao Kumari are palpably false, I mean, the recitals indicating the motives and reasons for the two transfers. There can be no doubt that the transaction was, so far as the Maharaja was concerned, purely a business transaction. It was entered into on the faith of representations by Chatrapat and others, and when the Maharaja found that he had been deceived, he at once took steps to have it rescinded with the result as above stated. The putni of Fatehpur Singia did not really belong to Jarao Kumari and there was no possible reason why Jarao Kumari should wish to make a gift to her daughter-in-law, the plaintiff, unless it were to screen some property from Chatrapat's creditors. Still less reason was there for the Maharaja to make a gift to the plaintiff, a lady whom he did not and could not personally know. The Maharaja, moreover, swore in 1897 that the first putni was granted to Jarao Kumari not for her own benefit but for that of Luchmipat's family, he believed Luchmipat to be the real beneficiary in the transfers.

On the 2nd February 1895 a deed was executed by which Jarao Kumari is said to have sold the putni in Suksena and the Clock Tower at Baluchar to Jamahar Kumari for Rs. 1,00,000, Rs. 90,000 in 3,000 gold mohurs and 11,000 in cash. The Clock Tower was not valued, but was thrown in in order to enable the deed to be registered at Baluchar. The effect of this deed was to put Suksena in its entirety in the name of the plaintiff. This is a most suspicious transaction. It is said that these two pardanashin ladies settled the whole matter, including the price, between themselves without the intervention and assistance of any one. It is further said that the gold mohurs were transferred from the plaintiff's chest to Jarao Kumari's also entirely at the ladies' own initiative.

No satisfactory explanation is forthcoming of how the plaintiff came to have this large sum in her safe, especially as not long before she had pledged her ornaments to raise Rs. 1,00,000 for her husband. The statement that she had received it in gifts from Luchmipat cannot be accepted. Moreover, some six weeks later, we find her raising Rs. 3,00,000 from the Pakur Raj on mortgage of Suksena. It is conceded that the release of the putni was put through only to facilitate that object by concentrating the nominal title to Suksena in one individual.

It is clear that this transfer of the putni was also a sham transaction.

The question, however, is, to whom did Suksena really belong. This has been determined by the Courts on several occasions.

Decree had been obtained by Harendra Kumar Roy and Sarat Kumar Roy against Chatrapat on the Original Side of this Court. In execution the three Baluchar properties were attached. Jarao Kumari, Jamahar Kumari and Jagatpat, son of Chatrapat, respectively filed claims which were disallowed. They then filed six suits under section 283, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. These suits were tried together and all were dismissed. We are concerned only with the suit of Jamahar in respect of the Clock Tower and incidentally of Suksena. It was held by the Subordinate Judge that she had on claim to the Clock Tower, and that the transfer of Suksena to her by the Maharaja was benami and that the transfer of the putni by Jarao Kumari was not bona fide. This was upheld by the District Judge on appeal, and a second appeal to this Court was not pressed.

In claim Case No. 1 of 1903 the present plaintiff put in a claim of various towjees in Suksena which had been attached by Bejoy Singh Dhudhuria, in execution of a decree against Chatrapat. The question there was the same, whether she was the bona fide possessor of the estates attached or only a benamidar for her husband, Chatrapat. The latter was found to be the case and her claim was disallowed. She applied to this Court in revision, when the learned Judges remarked that "it is perfectly clear that the applicant is not a bona fide claimant, and that the claim is only one of a series of transactions by which Chatrapat Singh is attempting to put his property beyond the reach of his creditors." An application by the plaintiff, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, was refused. She then filed a Title Suit No. 3 of 1904, but eventually withdrew it, Bejoy Singh Dudhuria's decree having been in some way satisfied. Lastly, on 20th November 1903, when in Bombay with his family, Chatrapat joined with Jamahar Kumari in conveying Towjee No. 429 in Suksena to Mansukhbhai Bhagabhai, a wealthy mill-owner of Ahmedabad. Bejoy Singh Dudhuria, as assignee of a decree against Chatrapat, had attached this towjee, and a claim by Munsukhbhai Bhagabhai to it, under the conveyance of 1903, was allowed. Bejoy Singh Dudhuria accordingly filed a suit for a declaration that it was really the property of Chatrapat and so liable to attachment. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, but on appeal to this Court it was held on 13th February 1914 that the conveyance to Mansukhbhai Bhagabhai was a sham transaction. It is worthy of note that in this conveyance Chatrapat joined, an entirely unnecessary precaution if the property really belonged solely to his wife. It is clear that the whole transaction was Chatrapat's and not the plaintiff's.

In the present case the plaintiff has put no fresh evidence before the Court. Chatrapat has been examined, but the plaintiff's Counsel very candidly admitted that he could not ask the Court to regard him as a witness of truth. It would be quite impossible to believe a word he says without corroboration, and that is not forthcoming. He evaded every question, taking refuge under an alleged failure of memory, although when it suited his purpose he volunteered long statements which showed that he could remember well enough.

As I have said, the evidence before me is the same as has been laid before the Court on previous occasions. There is nothing fresh at all to better the plaintiff's case. I need not, therefore, discuss the evidence in detail, suffice to say that it is clear to demonstration that the plaintiff was never really the owner of Suksena but merely the benamidar. It was not acquired with her money, and neither the possession nor the mode of management were ever changed. It has been Chatrapat's throughout.

That being so, it is clear that the Rs. 3,00,000, out of which Saraswati's decree was purchased (if it was so purchased), was not the plaintiff's money, but Chatrapat's and the proceedings in execution of that decree were nominally the plaintiff's, in reality Chatrapat's.

The fact that the Rs. 60,000 is unaccounted for, and that the decree was never again executed, is significant. Also we have the fact that Sripat's suit of 1895 has never been proceeded with, and the title-deeds of 147, Cotton Street, are still with the mortgagee with whom they were deposited by Chatrapat by way of equitable mortgage in February 1893. There can be no doubt that Chatrapat regarded, 147 Cotton, Street as his Calcutta family dwelling house, as appears from the insolvency proceedings and other documents.

It is said that he and his wife are not now on good terms, but that is a matter of the last five or six years and does not affect the transactions now in question which date back to far beyond that.

On a consideration of the whole case, I find that the plaintiff has completely failed to prove her title to the property, 147, Cotton Street, and dismiss her suit with costs on scale 2.

The costs of suit will include reserved costs, if any, and the costs of the commission to examine the plaintiff. With regard to these costs, however, the plaintiff is entitled to have her costs of the first day's sitting of the commission, 30th December 1912, from the defendant Askaran Boid, to be set off against the other costs awarded against her."

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is a suit occasioned by the determination adversely to the plaintiff, Jamahar Kumari Bibi, of a claim to property preferred by her in execution proceedings.

This property is No. 147, Cotton Street, and Chitty, J., has held that Jamahar, though ostensibly its owner, is in truth merely a benamidar for the judgment-debtor, her husband, Chatrapat Singh. He accordingly has dismissed the suit. From this judgment the present appeal has been preferred.

The house was put up for sale in execution of a decree against Chatrapat Singh and was ostensibly bought by Jamahar on the 10th of April 1897 for Rs. 50,000. No cash passed and the explanation is that on the 2nd of March 1896 the decree was expressed to be assigned to Jamahar in consideration of Rs. 1,10,000, and the Rs. 50,000 was set off against a corresponding part of what was due under the decree.

Jamahar contends that the assignment to her of the decree is free from flaw and that the defendants have not established its invalidity.

How then did Jamahar get this sum of Rs. 1,10,000 with which to buy this decree against her husband? Her case is that it is a part of a sum of three lacs raised by her on the 26th March 1895 by a mortgage to the Pakur Rajah. It is recited in that instrument of mortgage that she was absolutely and beneficially seized and possessed in her own right and as her own property free from incumbrances of both the zemindari and putni rights in the zemindari Parganah Suksena and these rights she purported to mortgage for Rupees 3 lacs.

The question then arises, were these zemindari and putni rights really hers? To answer this, it is necessary to look into certain transactions of 1893 and 1895.

On the 15th August 1893 Jarao, Chatrapat's mother, relinquished in favour of the Maharajah Sir Jotindra Mohun Tagore her putni right in Fatehpur Singia and conveyed to him the arrears of rent due to her from the tenants. In the instrument of relinquishment it is recited that she had learnt that it would be beneficial to her to acquire the maliki right of Suksena by relinquishing the putni right to Fatehpur Singia and then the recitals proceed as follows: 'So I applied to the Maharajah Bahadur for the conveyance of the maliki right of Suksena by relinquishing the said Fatehpur Singia, whereupon both myself and the Maharajah Bahadur would be benefited by this transaction, and we both agreed to the same. Accordingly with the object of fulfilling my long-cherished desire of making a gift of a zemindari in favour of my daughter-in-law Srimati Jamahar Kumari Bibi,—which for various reasons I could not fulfil (so long)—I applied to the Maharaja Bahadur for making over the zemindari right to the said Suksena to the aforesaid Jamahar Kumari Bibi by a deed of gift, believing that my desire would be fulfilled and that it would bring me pleasure if the Maharajah Bahadur would now give away the maliki right to the aforesaid Suksena zemindari by a deed of gift in favour of my daughter-in-law, Jamahar Kumari Bibi, instead of me, and the Maharajah Bahadur having agreed thereto and having executed a deed of gift in favour of the said Bibi.' Then there follows the relinquishment. On the same date an instrument described as a deed of gift was executed by the Maharaja in favour of Jamahar. It is there recited as follows: 'At present the said Bibi Saheba having proposed that she should surrender the putni right which she has in the aforesaid Fatehpur Singia by executing a separate deed of surrender in my favour and that in lieu of the same I should make an absolute gift of the proprietary right in the said zemindari Suksena to you, who are her daughter-in-law, and expressed that the Bibi Saheba would be pleased with and benefited by it, I have agreed to the said proposal and have taken khas possession of the said putni mahal and I have been benefited thereby. I being pleased with this act of your mother-in-law's and owing to the friendship of my deceased paternal grandfather and deceased paternal uncle and myself with your husband's paternal grandfather, the late Babu Protap Singh, and your husband's deceased father, I have, with the desire of doing you a good turn at the present time, agreed cheerfully to make a gift to you of the proprietary and other rights, title, interest and concern which I have in respect of the said zemindari Suksena in accordance with the said proposal and you have agreed to accept the same." Then there followed the gift of zemindari Suksena to Jamahar.

By an instrument, dated the 2nd February 1895, Jarao assigned to Jamahar her putni rights in Suksena as also the Girjaghar in Baluchar for Rs. 1,01,000. This is the title Jamahar claims to show to the zemindari and putni rights mortgaged to the Pakur Rajah. To complete the history of the family's dealings with the property it is necessary to refer to certain instruments executed in 1880.

The first is dated the 13th of November, and it purports to be a sale by Luchmiput, Chatrapat's father, to his wife, Jarao, of three properties specified in the instrument including the Girjaghar for Rs. 50,000. No cash passed, but the price was treated as a partial payment of a debt due to her from her husband. On the 15th November, Luchmipat and Chatrapat executed in favour of the Maharajah Sir Jotindra Mohun Tagore an assignment of the zemindaris Fatehpur Singia, Suksena, Mamdanipur and Poladasi for Rs. 13,50,000. At the same time there was a grant by the Maharajah to Jarao of the putni right in these four zemindaris for Rs. 2,04,000. This sum was not paid but was kept back by the Maharajah from the purchase-money for the zemindaris and allowed in account between Jarao and her husband by way of deduction from the debt alleged to have been due to her.

This then is the history of the material transactions and the view of Chitty, J., was that the intervention of both Jarao and Jamahar was as benamidars. I recognize that the value of this opinion is in some measure discounted by the fact that it was in part based on the view expressed in earlier litigations, a class of evidence that was used by the learned Judge to an extent that the law does not permit. But apart from this evidence, there are circumstances which clearly fall for explanation and the onus in this case is on Jamahar to show affirmatively that not only the ostensible but the real title also is in her.

She is a plaintiff who is calling in question in a suit contemplated by the Code (Order XXI, rule 63) an adverse decision of the Court given, it is true, in a summary proceeding, but conclusive subject to the result of this suit. This is a suit, therefore, to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of the Court, and it is a method of obtaining review: Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (1).-

The plaintiff in the circumstances of this case cannot discharge the burden of proof cast on her by merely pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which she claims: she must show that they are as good as they look. If specific authority for this is needed, it is furnished by many cases, among which are the decisions of Sir Richard Couch in Roop Ram Doss v. Saseeram Nath Kurmoker (2) and of Sir Charles Sargent in Govind Atmaram v. Santai (3).

It is then useless for Jamahar to contend that the actual deeds under which she claims are free from appearance of unreality and, therefore, it rests on the defendants to make out that they are colourable. Moreover, these deeds are so interwoven with the earlier transactions that they cannot be considered apart from them, and it cannot be claimed that the examination of the dealings disclosed on the record inspires confidence in Jamahar's case. Nor are matters mended when the later dealings are closely examined. Thus, to deal with the alleged purchase by Jamahar of Saraswati's decree. No doubt the price was made in cash, but why should Jamahar have brought on her own account this decree against her husband, a decree which she has never been able to realize, whether she has made real endeavours in that direction or not?

The question has naturally been asked, where did she get the money to pay the price, Rs. 1,10,000? The answer has been that it was a part of the Pakur Raj loan, and in support of this our attention has been invited to the fact that four of the Rs. 10,000 notes handed over in payment for the transfer of the decree are identical with four notes received on the occasion of the Pakur Rajah's mortgage. But it would seem that of the Rs. 10,000 notes paid on the transfer of the decree some were not received in connection with the Pakur Rajah's mortgage.

This is apparent from the entry, Exhibit DI, in Jamahar's rokur, where we find that of nine notes of Rs. 10,000 each five were not received on the execution of the Pakur Rajah's mortgage. In fact of the 30 notes of Rs. 10,000 then received from the Pakur Rajah only four formed part of the price paid for Saraswati's decree.

This does not agree with the explanation given by Jamahar and her witnesses, nor is there any suggestion made of intermediate dealings between the 16th of March 1895 and the 2nd of March 1896 which might account for the change in the notes representing the Pakur Rajah's advance.

Nor is this the only difficulty. No explanation is given why in March 1895 Jamahar should have borrowed three lacs, or having borrowed it, should have kept so large a sum as Rs. 1,04,000 in her custody apparently uninvested.

Moreover, the mode in which the entry is made on the 3rd Falgun 1302 (14th February 1896) only serves to increase the difficulty, especially when it is borne in mind that the entry is in her rokur. And the same remark applies to the subsequent entry of the 21st of March.

A speculative explanation has been tendered for our acceptance, but it does not accord with the opening entry of September 1895 in the corresponding ledger. The true position might have been disclosed by the next preceding rokur and ledger, but they are not forthcoming. It is said that they are lost, but why they alone should have suffered that fate does not appear.

The later matters only serve to emphasise the necessity for clear and convincing proof of the genuineness of the transactions on which Jamahar relies and when she fails to produce the books that should disclose the truth, she cannot complain if an adverse presumption be drawn. What is disclosed suggests that though the Pakur Rajah's advance ostensibly came into Jamahar's hands it merely passed through them, and that the payment for Saraswati's decree merely passed through Jamahar's rokur as a matter of form. Nor is the failure to produce evidence limited to these account books. Jarao, if all that is represented regarding her be true, played an important part, and yet she was not called as a witness. True it is that she is a pardahnashin lady and advanced in years, but there can have been no difficulty in her evidence being taken on commission, as Jamahar's was.

Then, Jamahar's ignorance of the transactions in which she is supposed to have been the principal person concerned is not without its significance, and in so saying I have particularly in mind her rambling story as to the Rs. 50,000, the price of 147, Cotton Street.

Each side has claimed that the evidence of possession favours it. But at most its effect is negative, and all that one can say is that it is not inconsistent with the case of either side.

I recognize the force of Jamahar's contention that a gift to her was within the Maharajah's competence, but all the circumstances have to be considered, and when this is done the validity of her title requires more cogent proof than this to establish its reality.

The evidence of Ganguly, it is true, is to some extent inadmissible as resting on what was told him by others. But there are matters on which he is able to give relevant evidence of importance, and this so far as it goes is adverse to the plaintiff's case, and to the genuine character of the Maharajah's assurance to her.

The result, then, is that though I hold some of the evidence on which Chitty, J., acted was not relevant, still I agree with him that the suit ought to be dismissed.

And I come to that conclusion because the plaintiff has wholly failed to prove that the transactions under which she claims were real and genuine, a burden that rested on her in view of the result of the summary proceedings and the circumstances of the case. Therefore, I think, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

No appeal lies either under the Code of Civil Procedure or the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing an application under section 115 of the Code to revise a decree of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Stephen, dated 21st November 1910, refusing an application to set aside an order in the matter of Suit No. 12314 of 1910 of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Stephen under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An application was made to the learned Judge for a Rule, calling on the opposite party to show cause why an order of the Small Cause Court should not be set aside. The learned Judge refused to grant the Rule. It is from that order of refusal that the present appeal is preferred.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. Certainly it does not lie under the Code. The only question is whether it lies under the Letters Patent. But in order that it may lie under the Letters Patent there must be a 'judgment.' In my opinion, the order of which complaint is made cannot be regarded as a 'judgment.' Therefore, I think the preliminary objection must prevail and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff-appellant is the landlord, and realises produce rents from about 130 rai-yats. In the Record of Rights of the village, it was recorded that half the produce of the land is paid as rent to the landlord. The further incidents of the system of produce-rent were recorded in full in a separate khatian, called the furd rewaz bhowli, to which reference was made in the khatian of each tenant. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the suit against all the tenants in a body upon one plaint with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only, for a declaration that the rates of rent payable by the tenants varied according to the occupation and caste to which they belonged (the rates varying from 20 seers to 22½ seers in a maund). The tenants entered into compromise with the plaintiff and the Assistant Settlement Officer made a decree according to the compromise. The matter came up before the Settlement Officer, who by his order dated the 15th September 1911, upheld the compromise and the decree passed by the Assistant Settlement Officer.

Subsequently it appears that the Settlement Officer acting under section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, by his order dated the 30th November 1911, held that the plaintiff ought to have instituted a separate suit against each tenant claiming to have both his khatian and the furd rewaz bhowli corrected and should have paid separate Court-fees on each, and that even if by consent of parties the suits are tried jointly he should pay the same Court-fee as if he had instituted a suit against each raiya. The Settlement Officer accordingly set aside "the order allowing the suit" and directed the plaintiff to pay additional Court-fees to the value of Rs. 1,290 within a certain time.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Special Judge upheld the order of the Settlement Officer, and the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the order, purported to be made under section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the Settlement Officer, could not be properly made under that section.

Under section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a Revenue Officer specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf has the power of revising any order or decision passed under sections 105, 105A, 106 or 107 made by himself or any other Revenue Officer. This power is not restricted to revision of the decision or order on the merits, and we are unable to hold that the Revenue Officer's order under section 108 was unauthorised.

The next question is, what is the Court-fee payable on the plaint. It was contended that under Order I, rule 3, all the defendants could be joined in one suit. That rule runs as follows :—"All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise." The suit instituted by the plaintiff was for a declaration to the effect that the entry in the furd rewaz that the proprietor's share is 20 seers and the tenants' share is 20 seers in the maund was wrong, and in lieu thereof it be declared that after deduction of costs, the proprietor's share is realised at the rate of 21 seers a maund from the Rajput Mahtawars, 21½ seers from the Kurmi Mahtawars, 20 seers from the amlas, 22½ seers from the ordinary tenants, and 22 seers from the Rajput tenants, besides cesses. As the defendants belong to different castes and follow different occupations, the rents payable by the defendants would be different, and although in the khatian the rent payable is stated to be one-half, the furd rewaz, if the plaintiff's prayer were granted, would show different rents payable by different tenants and the rent-note appended to each khatian will have to be altered. One suit, however, might be instituted against such of the tenants as belong to the same caste or follow the same occupation. For instance, the plaintiff alleged that the Rajput Mahtawars pay rent at rate of 21 seers. If there are ten such tenants, we think one suit might have been brought against the ten tenants with a Court-fee of ten rupees, because the same declaration would have to be made with respect to all the said ten tenants. We are of opinion, therefore, that a separate suit ought to have been instituted with respect to each class of tenants as indicated above. Only one suit appears to have been instituted against all the tenants jointly apparently without any objection on the part of the tenants who compromised the case with the plaintiff, and the Revenue Officer did not insist upon the presentation of a separate plaint in each case, but directed the plaintiff to pay a Court-fee of Rs. 10 as in a separate case against each tenant. In the view we have taken a separate Court-fee should have been paid for each class of tenants as stated above.

The last question is, whether the Revenue Officer had any power to direct the payment of Court-fee in revision when no objection was raised as to the same in the Court of first instance. We are of opinion that he had the power under section 28 of the Court Fees Act to order that the plaint be properly stamped. In the case of Chedi Lal v. Kirath Chand (1), the plaint in a suit bore insufficient Court-fee. In second appeal it was held by the Full Bench that if a document which ought to bear a stamp under the Court Fees Act has been used in the High Court, and the mistake or inadvertence which permitted its reception in a lower Court without being properly stamped comes to light in the High Court, any Judge of that Court may under section 28 of the Court Fees Act direct that it should be properly stamped. Following the principle of that decision we hold that the Revenue Officer had the power to order the plaint to be properly stamped.

The order of the Special Judge and the order of the Revenue Officer, dated the 30th November 1911, are accordingly modified as indicated above. If the Court-fee as indicated above be not paid on or before the 1st September 1914, the suit will stand dismissed. If the Court-fee be paid within the time aforesaid, the compromise decree passed by the Assistant Settlement Officer will stand confirmed. We make no order as to costs of this appeal. Let the record be sent down at once.

Decree modified.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 264—"Persons dealing with," meaning of—Dissolution of partnership—Public notice not given, effect of—Partners, who are—Question of fact—Court, power of.

The words "persons dealing with a firm" in section 264 of the Contract Act mean "persons who have been in the habit of dealing with and at the time of the dissolution were contemplating further dealing with the firm, on the faith of the firm remaining the same as that with which their dealings commenced." [p. 865, col. 2.]

Therefore persons dealing with a firm cannot be affected by any dissolution of which public notice had not been given unless they have had actual notice. [p. 866, col. 2.]

It is always a question of fact, who were or were not partners at the time the persons dealing with the firm commenced and carried on their dealings. The Courts are authorized to adjudge their claims against the firm which seeks to evade them on the ground that the only solvent partner ceased to be a partner during the continuance of the dealings, as though such partners had not been secretly withdrawn. [p. 867, col. 1.]

Messrs. Wadia, Desai and Taraporewalla, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Weldon and Setalvad, for Defendant No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This suit is brought by Messrs. B. G. Gorio and Company, a firm, against the three defendants, Vallabhdas Kalianji, Manilal Premchand and Dwarkadas Naranji, as members constituting the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas and Co., to recover the losses on certain indent dealings. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appear and admit the plaintiffs' claim in full.

The only question which I have been asked to try so far in this Court is, whether defendant No. 3, Dwarkadas Naranji, was a partner in the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas, and as such was, and still is, liable to the plaintiffs.

We start from the admitted proposition that defendant No. 3 was a partner of the firm up to the 9th of November 1912. I say that this is admitted, because there is nothing in the written statement to suggest the contrary and the fact has been explicitly admitted by defendant No. 3 in his own correspondence exhibited in the suit. It is true that at the trial his Counsel sought to start an entirely new defence, namely that he never was at any time a partner in this firm. I cannot encourage a deliberate falsehood of this kind, nor can I allow pleadings to be so far extended as to embrace an entirely new and, on the face of it, an entirely false defence. I, therefore, confined defendant No. 3 strictly to his pleadings and his admissions. In my opinion, the written statement itself could mean nothing else than that defendant No. 3 had never thought of denying that he had been a partner in Messrs. Lakhmidas Vallabhdas and Co., and that construction is amply borne out by the admissions contained in his letters, notably the letter of the 19th November 1914. When he decided to contest the suit, he evidently relied upon the special doctrine of the English Law, namely, that as a sleeping partner, of whose existence no indication was given by the name of the firm, he would not fall within the scope of section 264 of the Indian Contract Act; and so advised, he framed and limited his defence. Coming to trial, I suppose, after the usual consultations, his legal advisers probably thought that that defence was not so sound as it might be, and, therefore, wished to supplement it by striking out an entirely new line and putting the plaintiffs to the proof of the fact that defendant No. 3 had at any time been a partner in the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas.

Now, the present dealings, out of which the firm's indebtedness arose, commenced on the 20th November 1914; and the plaintiffs have sought to strengthen their case by alleging and proving that defendant No. 3 was not only a partner in the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas up to the 9th November 1912, but continued to be so at all times material to the fixing of the liability in this suit. To that end witnesses have been examined: Vallabhdas and Manilal, the two admitted partners in the firm, and one Morarji Keshavji, who prove that defendant No. 3 continued to be a partner in this firm of Lakhmidas and Vallabhdas long after the completion of the indent contract with the plaintiff firm. The evidence of Morarji, as being that of a disinterested outsider, is of special value. He swears that his firm had dealings with Lakhmidas Vallabhdas and Co. at about the same time as the dealings in suit and that the indebtedness therein incurred by the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas was settled in 1913 by defendant No. 3, Dwarkadas Naranji, at his own house and after the intervention of his brother, Lalji Naranji. If that story be true, it would certainly go far to prove that the defendants' present case is untrue. Then, there is the direct and positive evidence of Vallabhdas and Manilal, which may be to some extent interested and, therefore, open to suspicion. It is certainly very direct and positive evidence, and I think it is a great deal better than the single unsupported word of defendant No. 3 to the contrary. I should, therefore, have very little hesitation in holding, if material, that the alleged dissolution of partnership and the consequent withdrawal from any further connection with the firm on the part of defendant No. 3, which is the sole basis of his defence, have been disproved and that, as a fact, he remained a partner at all times material to the present litigation. But I should be equally confident, had that finding been the other way, that he is still liable to the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs were persons dealing with the firm within the meaning of section 264. Their dealings began in June 1912 and the business continued when, and during the time, the present contracts were entered into and carried through, that is to say, the settlements of the contracts made in June were not completed until December 1912 or January 1913. Therefore, for all the purposes of applying section 264, the plaintiffs were certainly persons dealing with the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas; and the defendant No. 3 was admittedly a partner of that firm at the time the dealings commenced and were in progress. Now, section 264 of the Indian Contract Act is one of the simplest and plainest sections to be found in our Statutes. It runs:

"Persons dealing with a firm will not be affected by a dissolution of which no public notice has been given, unless they themselves had notice of such dissolution."

The only possible opening for an ingenious construction and interpretation of this section appears to me to lie in the words "persons dealing with"; and I have no doubt whatever that those words mean "persons who have been in the habit of dealing with and at the time of the dissolution were contemplating further dealing with the firm, on the faith of the firm remaining the same as that with which their dealings commenced" Now, that being so, it is perfectly clear that such persons cannot be affected by any dissolution of which public notice had not been given unless they have had actual notice. It is admitted that defendant No. 3 gave no public notice and no attempt has been made to prove that the plaintiff firm had actual notice of the alleged dissolution. The defendants' case is that the old firm was dissolved on the 9th of November and that on and from the 10th of November a new firm under the same name, style and title, but consisting of Vallabhdas and Manilal, carried on the business, in other words, that the only moneyed man in the firm, Dwarkadas Naranji, defendant No. 3, surreptitiously and covertly withdrew, leaving all those who had been dealing with the firm and contemplated further dealing with the firm in the belief that no change whatever had been made in the firm. Such persons are surely not to be affected by the fact, if it be a fact, that such a change had occurred, and that a firm bearing a definite name and having a certain constitution, which continues under that name, has, in fact, been dissolved without public notice being given and without actual notice being had. Where that occurs, it makes no difference whether the fact be as alleged or not; for the liabilities of the original members constituting the firm must remain the same since the persons dealing with that firm are not to be affected by the dissolution. I am unable to agree with the decision of Tyabji, J., in the case of Greaves v. Purshotam (1) to which my attention was invited. That learned Judge appears to have had no difficulty in holding that section 264 did not override the special rule of the English Law in respect to dormant partners. That rule is founded on very good reasons and is specially referable to the principles of estoppel, but section 264 of the Indian Contract Act has been conceived in a much wider spirit and has a much wider scope. Where its language is perfectly plain and covers every case, quite irrespective of special deductions to be drawn from the principles of estoppel, I do not feel, as a Judge, I ought to exercise my ingenuity over cases which plainly fall within it, in endeavouring to put limitations and interpretations upon its language with the effect of making the Legislature say one thing and mean quite another. Moreover, I conceive that this section has been framed designedly in this comprehensive way to strike at a very wide and well-recognized evil that infects commercial dealings in this country. It is true that the English rule arises in this way. Old customers, it is said, who had dealt with the firm on the faith of its constitution being of a certain quality, could not be deprived of the security given them by that peculiar constitution as a result of any private breaking-up or dissolution of the firm, unless special notice had been given to each of them. Public notice was generally considered sufficient for the casual, or merely intending, customer. Underlying all this is clearly the principle of estoppel, viz., that the firm, holding itself out to consist of several individuals, in any one or more of whom persons dealing with the firm have peculiar faith, cannot make any change in the constitution of the firm, while dealings with them still continue, to the detriment of those persons, without giving any notice that such a change has been made. And out of this, the special rule applied to dormant partners naturally evolves; for it is said that where the name of the firm gives no indication of the inclusion among its members of a certain person (that person being so more than a sleeping partner taking no active part in the business) then the old customers, or the public in general, dealing with the firm cannot be influenced in giving the firm their business by any considerations peculiar to the presence of the partner thus totally unknown to them. So that in the event of such a person being withdrawn from the firm no notice, either public or actual, is required. But had it been the intention of the Legislature in India to enforce such a rule in this country, nothing could have been easier than to say so by adding a few words to section 264. In this country, however, where firms are very often of an extremely complex character and there is no law, as there certainly ought to be, compelling the registration of partnerships, and where such firms are constituted without any writing and appear to be in a constant process of change, partners retiring and partners being added without any dissolution, what the Legislature aims at preventing is the establishment of firms on an originally sound basis and the subsequent secret withdrawal of that basis. When firms are established in this way and customers' transactions are referable to the continuance of the old firm, from which the only member who ever possessed any money secretly withdraws, it is not necessary in applying section 264 to have recourse to any principles of estoppel. There is not a single word in the section to suggest that the persons or the public dealing with the firm should have any knowledge of its actual constitution or should have been influenced by the fact that the particular individual was a partner in it; and that too for a very good reason that the names of the firms in this country hardly ever do indicate who are the actual partners. But when a firm is started, if it is ever to have any career at all, it is almost certain that some one in the partnership must have a certain amount of capital. The firm then gradually establishes itself on a real solid money basis, and, being so established, the only member of the firm who really possesses capital secretly withdraws, leaving the firm under the same name and, to all outward appearances, the same, to trade on its reputation with the public, although now it is nothing but a shell and a sham. The public cannot always be inquiring as to the changes going on in the constitution of these Indian firms, and, therefore, our Statute leaves it always to be a question of fact, who were or were not partners at the time the persons dealing with the firm commenced and carried on their dealings, and directs that Courts shall adjudge their claims against the firm, which seeks to evade them on the ground that the only solvent partner ceased to be a partner during the continuance of the dealings, as though such partners had not been secretly withdrawn. Here, we have a typical instance. The name of the firm indicates the name of one person, and one person only, Vallabhdas. The firm appears to have established itself for a short period, owing, no doubt, to the private inquiries made by those who dealt with it and the ascertainment by them of the fact that one of the partners was Dwarkadas Naranji—so establishes itself, I say, for a short period under a decent appearance in the local market. Then, when it had business relations on a large scale with reputable firms like the plaintiffs, Dwarkadas Naranji, the 3rd defendant, the only man in the firm with any capital at all, covertly withdraws, and the plaintiffs are left to risk their money upon an adventure, which, should it turn out disastrously, would leave them creditors of a sham bankrupt firm. The firm, on the other hand, has everything to gain and nothing to lose. If the adventure turns out well, the firm makes its profits and all the partners come in for a share of these profits. Now, this is precisely the evil which section 264 of the Indian Contract Act is intended to correct. I can see no advantage whatever in excluding from its operation cases which might be excluded in England from the general principles governing the rights and liabilities of dissolved firms in respect to their old customers and the public generally. I do not admit that the section requires any interpretation whatever. I know that, as far back as 1882, it was critically considered in Calcutta in the case of Chundee Churn Dutt v. Edduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (2) and its interpretation in that Court was governed largely, if not exclusively, by reference to the English Law, but there the point was only whether this section puts old customers in a worse position than they would be under the English Law; and no question ever was made, unless indeed the judgment of Tyabji, J., were taken to be an exception, that customers of a firm were to be damnified by a dissolution without either a public or an actual notice. In the present case, we have the plaintiffs fulfilling all the requirements of that section being persons dealing with the firm at the time defendant No. 3 was a partner. According to defendant No. 3 the firm dissolved during the progress of those dealings and at a time when the plaintiff firm was giving very large credit to Lakhmidas Vallabhdas on the faith of the original dealings and the information obtained in the inquiries they had instituted. It is a clear case, then, of a firm being dissolved with the intention of damnifying persons dealing with it at the time. Those persons claim the protection of section 264 of the Indian Contract Act. It is admitted that no notice was given to them, and they had no notice in fact of the alleged dissolution. They appear to me to be entitled to the fullest protection of that section. Therefore, quite apart from the further fact that defendant No. 3 is shown not to have ceased to be a partner at any time material to the present suit, his liability in law would, in my opinion, be as clearly and firmly established. On this point, therefore

(1) 5 Bom. L. R. 366.

GIOVANI GORIO v. VALLABHDAS KALIANJI.

(2) 8 C. 678; 11 C. L. R. 225.

AMBIKA CHARAN V. SASITARA DEBI.

I must find that the defence of defendant No. 3 entirely fails, that for all the purposes of this suit he is a partner of the firm of Lakhmidas Vallabhdas, and equally liable with the other partners for the indebtedness of that firm to the plaintiffs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 18th August 1913, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 8th July 1912.

Babu Akshoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Rajendra Chandra Guha and Trailokhya Nath Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by two of the defendants in a suit for partition of joint property. The property originally belonged to one Ramlochan Ganguly, who made a testamentary disposition on the 5th November 1850. He left three sons—Tarini, Guru Charan and Ishan, and a grandson by a daughter, named Nilmoney. Tarini left two sons—Sasi Kumar and Basanta. The plaintiffs-respondents are the legal representatives of Sasi Kumar. The eighth and ninth defendants are the representatives of Basanta. The defendants-appellants have acquired the interest of Nilmoney in the portion of the property in dispute. The substantial question in controversy between the parties was, whether Nilmoney took a life-interest in the estate of his maternal grandfather, which terminated upon his death, or whether he took an absolute interest (subject to a condition which was fulfilled by him) which, upon his death, passed to his representatives. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the present appellants. That decree was assailed in appeal by the plaintiffs who claim by right of inheritance a half share of the interest which was vested in Nilmoney during his life-time. The eighth and ninth defendants, who set up a precisely similar claim in the primary Court, were not joined as respondents, nor did they prefer an appeal on their own account. Upon the appeal of the plaintiffs, the District Judge has reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and has made a decree, not only in favour of the appellants before him, but also in favour of the two defendants who were not parties to that appeal. On the present appeal, the decree of the District Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that it was not competent to him to vary the decree of the Court of first instance in favour of persons who were neither appellants nor respondents before him; and, secondly, that upon a true construction of the Will of the original proprietor, he should have affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

As regards the first ground, it is plain that neither rule 4 nor rule 20 of Order XLI of the Code is of any assistance to the respondents. Rule 4 is in these terms: "Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants, may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be." Consequently, to justify the application of this rule, it is essential that the appeal should have been preferred against the whole decree. In the case before us, the decree of the Court of first instance was assailed by the plaintiffs alone, and only to the extent that they were prejudicially affected thereby. Rule 20 is in these terms: "Where it appears to the Court at the hearing that any person who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal, the Court may adjourn the hearing to a future date to be fixed by the Court and direct that such person be made a respondent."

This rule has obviously no application to this case, and the District Judge did not take action under it.

Rule 33, however, is expressed in much wider terms as follows: "The Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection." For the application of this rule, consequently, it is not essential that the appeal should be directed against the entire decree; nor need the order be made in favour of persons who are parties to the appeal or have filed objections in the Court below. In the case before us, plaintiffs as the representatives of Sasi Kumar and the eighth and ninth defendants as the representatives of Basanta were in an identical position with regard to the estate of Nilmoney; in other words, if the contention prevailed that Nilmoney had an interest terminable with his life, that interest would vest, after his death, equally in the representatives of Sasi Kumar and Basanta. Consequently, if upon the appeal of the plaintiffs, the Court was satisfied that the decree of the primary Court was erroneous and was based upon an incorrect interpretation of the Will of the original proprietor, the ends of justice required that the benefit of such decision should accrue not merely to the plaintiffs-appellants before the lower Appellate Court, but also to the representatives of Basanta, although the latter were neither parties respondents to the appeal nor appellants in an appeal preferred by themselves. The first ground upon which the decree of the District Judge is assailed cannot consequently be supported.

As regards the second ground, the validity of the respective contentions of the parties must be tested with reference to the terms of the Will. On behalf of the representatives of Basanta, it has been argued that Nilmoney had nothing beyond a right of residence in a portion of the property of his maternal grandfather. On behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents a higher status has been conceded to him; and it has been contended that he took a life-interest in the estate of his maternal grandfather, which terminated on his death. In opposition to these contentions, the appellants have argued that Nilmoney was given an absolute interest subject to a condition, namely, that he should have an interest so long as he resided in the house of his maternal grandfather. Under section 82 of the Indian Succession Act, it is plain that where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the Will that only a restricted interest was intended for him. Prima facie, Nilmoney had an absolute interest. The question is, whether he took, as is argued by the appellants, an absolute interest subject to a condition, or whether, as is argued by the plaintiffs-respondents, he took a life-interest. The terms of the Will are by no means free from ambiguity, as is indicated by the fact that the Courts below have taken divergent views upon this the most material point in the case. After anxious consideration of the arguments addressed to us on both sides, we have arrived at the conclusion that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct. In our opinion, the intention of the testator was to give an absolute interest to Nilmoney, his grandson by daughter, who lived with him and was brought up by him. It is plain that he intended to make a provision for him; but he insisted, as was not unnatural, that his grandson should reside in his house. This was imposed as a condition, and not as an indication that the interest created was a life-estate. It would further be an unreasonable interpretation of all the provisions of the Will to hold that the testator intended to enforce the condition of residence even after the death of Nilmoney. The condition was perfectly legal under section 121 of the Indian Succession Act [Ganendro Mohun Tagore v. Rajah Juttendro Mohun Tagore (1), Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (2), Shyama Charan v. Naba Chandra (3)] and it was fulfilled by Nilmoney because there is no dispute that, during his life-time, he continued to reside in the dwelling house of his maternal grandfather. The result was that, upon his death, his interest passed to his representatives and has now vested, not in the respondents, but in the appellants.

Reference has finally been made to the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mohamed Shumscol Hooda v. Shewukram (4); and it has been argued that as there is a presumption that a Hindu does not desire that any portion of his property should pass beyond his own family, every effort should be made to avoid a contrary result. That, however, is not an inflexible guiding principle of universal application, as is made manifest by contrasting the decisions in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5) and Radha Prasad v. Ramee Mani Dassee (6). Where, as here, the terms of the Will indicate that an absolute interest, subject to a condition, was intended to be granted to a grandson by a daughter, it would be wrong to interpret its provisions so as to restrict that interest and thus defeat the intention of the testator.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. In view, however, of the obscurity in the terms of the Will, which justifies a contest, we direct that each party pay his costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

Appeal allowed.

Muhammadan Law—Dower—Widow in possession of property in lieu of dower with consent of heirs, right of—Substantial right—Heritable—Wrongful dispossession—Suit for possession, maintainability of.

A right acquired by a Muhammadan widow in possession of the property of her deceased husband with the consent of the heirs in lieu of her dower is a substantial right amounting in certain circumstances to a right in substitution of the claim for dower and is heritable and devolves on her heirs. [p. 874, col. 2.]

A widow in possession of her deceased husband's property in lieu of dower with the consent of the heirs has a right to claim back the possession if it has been wrongfully disturbed by anybody. [p. 875, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the Joint first Class Subordinate Judge at Surat in Suit No. 978 of 1909.

Mr. Manubhai Nanabhai, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. G. Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the declaration of a certain lien over a house and for confirmation and recovery of possession of different parts of the same house. The owner of the house was one Nanumiyani, a Sunni Muhammadan, who died in May 1897. He left behind him his mother, Misri Bibi two widows, Bibi Lalkhatun and Bibi Saheb Jan, one daughter, Bibi Fazl-un-nissa, and one brother, Majidmiyan. The mother died a year or two later. The senior widow, Lalkhatun died in December 1906. The widows lived in the house at the time of their husband's death and their case is that they continued to live there until their return to Shikarpur in Sind to their paternal relations in 1906. The junior widow, Saheb Jan, and the heirs of the senior widow join in bringing the present suit against the brother and daughter of Nanumiyan. Their case is that the dower fixed for Lalkhatun at the time of her marriage was Rs. 50,000 and that fixed for Saheb Jan was Rs. 7,500, that Nanumiyan died without paying any part of the said dower, that the widows remained in possession of the house in lieu of their dower until 1906 and that thereafter the surviving widow and the heirs of the deceased widow had been in peaceful possession of the house until 1908, when the brother disputed their claim to retain possession of the house and tried to disturb them in their possession. They filed the suit on the 23rd April 1909 asserting their claim to the house in respect of the whole dower of Rs. 57,500. The brother disputed the claim on various grounds. He contended that the amount of the dower was not fixed as stated by the plaintiffs, that the widows had renounced their claim to the dower at the time of Nanumiyan's death, that the house in suit did not belong to his deceased brother exclusively but to both of them jointly, that the widows had never been in possession of the house in lieu of their dower, and that according to the Muhammadan Law they had no right to the house. He also maintained that the two rooms, which were admittedly in his possession, were not held by him with the permission of the widows but in his own right. The daughter, defendant No. 2, admitted the plaintiffs' claim.

The trial Court raised several issues of fact and law and decided them in favour of the plaintiffs except as to two rooms. The learned first class Subordinate Judge held that the dower due to the two widows was Rs. 57,500, that the widows had been in possession of the house except the two rooms, which were found to be lawfully in the possession of defendant No. 1, in lieu of their dower, that the plaintiffs were in possession up to 1908 when the cause of action arose against defendant No. 1 and that they were entitled to the reliefs claimed. He disallowed the plaintiffs' claim as to the two rooms in the possession of defendant No. 1. A decree was passed on the 25th April 1913 giving effect to the findings in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendant No. 1 has appealed against this decree in respect of the main part of the house, and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections in respect of the two rooms. The cross-objections, however, are not pressed, and we have only to consider the points urged in support of the appeal. It will be convenient to keep the questions of fact and law distinct and to deal with the former in the first instance.

As regards the amount of dower, it has been urged generally that the evidence is all oral and relates to events which occurred several years ago, and that it is interested and not reliable. It is true that Nanumiyan's marriage with Lalkhatun took place in 1870 and that with Saheb Jan in 1891. But there is a large body of evidence in the case, and it is quite impossible to treat the whole of it as being either interested or unreliable. It is obvious from the agreement, which Nanumiyan passed at the time of his marriage with Lalkhatun, that he valued this connection very highly and was prepared to submit to any terms in order to secure it.

The position of Lalkhatun's father's family was such that there is no inherent improbability in such a large amount being fixed for her dower. The evidence of Sadakali, brother of Lalkhatun, also explains the circumstances under which Nanumiyan's marriage with Saheb Jan was brought about. We see no reasons to distrust the oral evidence adduced in support of the plaintiffs' allegations on this point, and we accept the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court, viz., that the dower for Lalkhatun was Rs. 50,000 and that for Saheb Jan was Rs. 7,500.

It is not necessary to consider, and the point was not mentioned in the argument, whether the dower was prompt or deferred. It makes no difference in the result, as it is not suggested that any part of the dower was demanded during the husband's life-time. The plea of remission by the widows of their claim to dower has been wisely abandoned in this appeal.

Next, as regards the ownership of the house, the lower Court has found, and in our opinion rightly found, that it belonged exclusively to Nanumiyan. It has been conceded by Mr. Manubhai for the appellant that the whole money spent in building the house belonged to Nanumiyan, and that nothing was proved to have been paid by his client. It was urged, however, that the house-site originally belonged to the ancestors of the two brothers, and that he had an interest in the land over which the house was built. But a careful perusal of the evidence of defendant No. 1 and of his step-brother, Shaikh Bahadur, on this point shows that this account of the house-site having originally belonged to the ancestors of Nanumiyan is really past history and has nothing to do with the present question. The lower Court seems to us to be quite right in holding that after changing hands it ultimately came in the hands of Nanumiyan as owner from his step-brother, Shaikh Bahadur, for valuable consideration.

On the question of possession of the house, however, there has been more serious argument. It has been urged by Mr. Manubhai that though the widows obtained possession of the house, they did not obtain it in lieu of dower with the consent of defendant No. 1. The fact of the possession having been with the widows up to 1906 is not disputed; and it cannot be disputed, in view of the clear admission of defendant No. 1 in his cross-examination, that "they (i. e., the widows) lived in the house after Nanumiyan's death till the death of Lalkhatun in 1906." There is nothing to show that their possession was not peaceful. Defendant No. 1 knew about their possession, and was himself in possession of a part of the upper story, viz., the two rooms already mentioned. There was no protest from him, and no dispute at the time. The matter, however, does not rest there. He says he "used to let out the hall on the ground-floor of the premises in suit, but the rent used to be accumulated with the Bibis." It seems to us to be futile to suggest under these circumstances that the widows' possession was without the consent of the heirs. The mother of Nanumiyan died in 1898 or 1899 and never disputed the widows' claim. The daughter does not dispute it. The only heir who disputes the fact of their having been in possession with the consent of the heirs is defendant No. 1. The evidence clearly shows that the defendant No. 1 not only acquiesced in, but accepted the fact of the possession of the house (two rooms of course excepted) being with the widows.

It was further urged that though they might have been in possession with the consent of defendant No. 1, they never asserted that they held the property in lieu of dower. This contention has no force. All the assets of Nanumiyan were exhausted in discharging his debts, which (debts) amounted to about Rs. 10,000. The house and furniture were the only assets left; and the widows were in possession of the house from the time of Nanumiyan's death. Under the circumstances it would be a fair inference to hold that they were in possession in lieu of dower. It is common ground that the widows were helped by Sadakali, brother of Lalkhatun; and it is difficult to understand why they should have stayed at Surat up to the year 1906 instead of returning to their parental house in Sind, if it were not for the purpose of asserting their right to the only substantial property which was left after paying off Nanumiyan's debts. In connection with this point Mr. Manubhai relied upon the circumstance that the estate of Nanumiyan was jointly administered by all the heirs, as the two sale-deeds and the succession certificate in the names of the widows and defendant No. 1 would show, and that the widows really took possession of the house in lieu of dower after the debts were discharged. The fact that defendant No. 1 joined the widows in selling certain properties and recovering certain outstandings of Nanumiyan is not inconsistent with the widows having been in possession of the house in lieu of their dower. It seems to us on the evidence that the widows really discharged the debts, and defendant No. 1 simply helped them in conveying the properties and in recovering the few outstandings of Nanumiyan. Besides, in view of the fact that they were in possession of the house from the beginning, it is difficult to see how their possession in lieu of dower can in point of fact be treated as commencing from the date when all the debts were discharged. Here we are speaking only of the fact, and do not mean to suggest that as a matter of law it would make any difference whether they purported to hold in lieu of dower or not and whether their possession in lieu of dower commenced in 1897 after Nanumiyan's death or somewhere in 1901, when all the debts are said to have been satisfied. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the widows were in possession of the house with the consent of the other heirs in lieu of their dower.

It has been urged, however, that even if the widows were in possession in 1906 there is nothing to show that the heirs of Lalkhatun had possession since 1906, when both the widows returned to Shikarpur leaving the house in charge of their servant, Khan Mahomed. It is clear that Saheb Jan continued in possession through her servant Khan Mahomed even after 1906. But it is urged that the heirs were never in possession. It seems to us that there is no substance in this contention. In the first place it was never suggested in the lower Court that the heirs of Lalkhatun were not in possession since 1906 though Saheb Jan was. All along the defendant pleaded that he was in possession and not the widows. Having failed to substantiate that plea, he now contends that Lalkhatun's heirs were not in possession. But it is common ground that Sadakali, who is one of the heirs of Lalkhatun and the principal man among her paternal relations, has throughout helped the two widows after Nanumiyan's death. It is established that Sadakali had been to Surat after Lalkhatun's death in 1907, when he occupied the house in suit. It is clear from the evidence of Sadakali, Saheb Jan and Khan Mahomed that all the Municipal taxes for the house have been paid by Sadakali after 1906 up to the date of this suit. Defendant No. 1 also admits the fact in his evidence. Khan Mahomed looked to Sadakali for instructions when there was any occasion for it, and Sadakali says distinctly that Khan Mahomed had charge of the house on behalf of the heirs of Lalkhatun and on behalf of Bibi Saheb Jan. This definite statement is met by defendant No. 1 by no specific denial but by the assertion that "he (Khan Mahomed) is still in service either of Saheb Jan or Sadakali." Surely defendant No. 1 is expected to know the position of the servant. Sadakali in fact took defendant No. 1 with him in 1907 to Khairpur for some employment and his equivocal statement under the circumstances seems to us to be virtually an admission that the servant was in possession of the house on behalf of all the plaintiffs and not only on behalf of Saheb Jan. In 1907 Sadakali took certain articles from the house, which he could do only if he was in possession; and it is in evidence that he had the keys with him when he went there. We are, therefore, of opinion that the present plaintiffs continued to have possession of the house after Lalkhatun's death until the disputes arose between the parties in 1908, that the possession of the ground floor of the house has been throughout with them, and that their possession of the upper story, excepting the two rooms in the possession of defendant No. 1, was disturbed after the plaint was filed, as stated in the amended plaint.

Before dealing with the points of law argued in this case, we desire to state generally that the evidence of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 in this case appears to us to be much more reliable than that of defendant No. 1. The readiness with which he has committed himself to altogether untenable positions, particularly with reference to the question of the ownership of the house and of the amount and remission of dower, is sufficient to shake one's confidence in his case generally.

It is urged by Mr. Manubhai on his behalf that the widows would have no right to retain possession of the house in respect of dower, unless they obtained it with the consent of the other heirs in lieu of dower, that in any case this right to retain possession is entirely personal and does not descend to the heirs of Lalkhatun, and that the right, which is in the nature of a lien, is a right of defence and not a right of action, and that, therefore, the claim to recover possession, which is in fact lost by the plaintiffs, is not good.

As regards the first of these contentions it is enough to say that it does not arise, as it is found that the widows had obtained possession in lieu of dower with the consent of the other heirs of Nanumiyān. Mr. B. G. Rao has urged in support of the plaintiffs' case that even if the consent of the heirs were not proved and even if it were not established that the possession was in lieu of dower, the widows would still have a right to hold the property of their husband until their claim to dower was satisfied, provided they had obtained possession lawfully and without force or fraud. He has relied upon Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (1) and Sabjan Bewa v. Ansaruddin (2). These decisions are in conflict with the case of Amanat-un-nissa v. Bashir-un-nissa (3). It is not necessary to decide this question in view of the finding that in this case the widows obtained possession of the property with the consent of the heirs in lieu of their dower.

The second contention is that so far as the heirs of Lalkhatun are concerned they have no claim, as the right of Lalkhatun was personal and could not devolve upon her heirs on her death. There is a conflict of decisions of the Allahabad High Court on this point. The right is held to be heritable in Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (4) and Ali Bakhsh v. Allahdad Khan (5). A different view is taken in Hadi Ali v. Akbar Ali (6) and Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati (7). There is no decision directly on this point which is binding upon us. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the nature of the right which the widow, having a claim to dower, acquires on obtaining possession of her husband's property. This right has been described by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musammāt

Bebee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (8) as follows:—"It is not necessary to say, whether this right of the widow in possession is a lien in the strict sense of the term, although no doubt the right is so stated in a judgment of the High Court in a case of Ahmed Hossein v. Musammāt Khadija (9). Whatever the right may be called, it appears to be founded on the power of the widow, as a creditor for her dower, to hold the property of her husband, of which she has lawfully, and without force or fraud, obtained possession, until her debt is satisfied, with the liability to account to those entitled to the property, subject to the claim for the profits received." This is, in our opinion, a substantial right and under certain circumstances it would practically be a right in substitution of the claim for dower. Where the amount of dower is large and far in excess of the value of the property of which the widow has obtained possession, and where there is no other property of the husband, as in the present case, the right of the widow to hold the property in lieu of her dower is the only right left, and, in our opinion, as substantial a right as her claim to dower. It is not disputed and cannot be disputed that the claim to dower is heritable and would devolve on her heirs. It is difficult to understand why the right, which is an incident of the claim to dower and is capable of being enjoyed as a substantive right in substitution of the claim to dower under certain circumstances, should be treated as a mere personal right, when the principal right of which it is an incident is not so treated according to the Muhammadan Law. It may be, as in this case, that after the widow has had possession for several years, her claim to dower may be time-barred; and she would care only for the right to hold the property in lieu of dower. The heirs would not care to have any accounts taken when it is clear that the proceeds fall far short of the amount due to the widow. The right to the possession of property appears to be quite a substantive right, and we see no reason to treat it as personal, when the claim to dower is a heritable right. For instance, if a widow does not obtain possession of her husband's property and sues the heirs in respect of her dower, she can obtain a decree and bring the property to sale. She would obtain the proceeds of the sale, and these proceeds would devolve on her heirs. There is no reason why the alternative right, which a Mubam-madan widow has of holding the property of her husband, with the liability to account, in lieu of her dower, should not devolve on her heirs on her death. This contention must, therefore, be disallowed.

It remains to consider the last contention, that the plaintiffs having been dispossessed of the portion of the upper story other than the two rooms, which were already in the possession of defendant No. 1, they cannot maintain an action to recover it, though they may be able to retain possession, which they have already got. This contention is based upon the analogy of lien. It seems to be unnecessary to determine whether it is a lien or the position is more analogous to that of mortgagee. Taking the right as described in the passage already quoted from the judgment in Musammatt Bebee Bachun's case (8), and treating it as a matter of substance and not of words, it seems to us that if the right is to be a real one the widow should have the right to claim back the possession, if it has been wrongfully disturbed by anybody. In this case the plaintiffs are found to have been in peaceful possession for a long time, and the wrongful dispossession by defendant No. 1 is no answer to their right to possession. No doubt, in most of the cases cited before us the widow was in possession and was resisting the claim to oust her. But it is no ground for holding that after having peaceful possession for a long time, if she were wrongfully dispossessed, she could not sue to recover the possession. In the case of Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (4) to which we have referred in connection with another point, it has been held by Oldfield and Mahmood, JJ., that the heirs of the widow, who were held to be entitled to succeed her in possession, have a right to maintain a suit for the recovery of the possession, if wrongfully deprived thereof.

All the points urged in support of the appeal fail.

We, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal and cross-objections with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

KAMAKSHA BASINI CHOWDHURANI

—OBJECTOR—APPELLANT

JAGAT SUNDARI CHOWDHURANI—

APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 47 (g) — Order for removal till decision of a particular case — Appeal—Inquiry, if necessary before removal.

One of the two joint guardians appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act applied for the removal of the other on the allegation that she had made an application for Letters of Administration to the estate of the father of the minor and thereby had acted in a manner which disqualified her from holding the office of guardian. The District Judge made the following order: "The elder widow (the applicant) is permitted to manage the minor's estate singly, until the disposal of the case for the next three months." Two months after another order was recorded: "Put up after disposal of the Letters of Administration case. Order regarding the management of the estate by the petitioner will remain for the present." An appeal was preferred against these orders.

Held, that the appeal was competent under clause (g) of section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act; [p. 876, col. 1.]

that an order of this description should not be made without some inquiry into the allegations made; [p. 876, col. 2.]

that the matter should not remain in abeyance till the disposal of the Letters of Administration case. [p. 876, col. 2.]

Appeal against the orders of the District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 15th September and 19th November 1913.

Babu Taruk Chunder Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.

Babu Mukund Nath Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against two orders passed under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. On the 31st August 1912, two ladies, who were the widows of one Kalikumar Sen Chowdhury and are the appellant and the respondent respectively in this appeal, were appointed joint guardians of the person and property of an infant, Hemendra Nath Sen Chowdhury, who had been taken in adoption by the respondent. The two guardians could not long act in harmony, and not many months had elapsed when on the 16th June 1913 the respondent applied to the District Judge for removal of the co-widow from the office of joint guardians. The application was promptly opposed. On the 30th August 1913 the respondent brought to the notice of the District Judge that the appellant had made an application for Letters of Administration to the estate of the father of the infant with a copy of an alleged Will and urged that thereby she had acted in a manner which disqualified her from holding the office of guardian. The District Judge thereupon, on the 15th September 1913, made the following order: "The elder widow is permitted to manage the minor's estate singly, until the disposal of the case for the next three months." On the 19th November another order to the following effect was recorded: "Put up after disposal of the Letters of Administration case. Order regarding the management of the estate by the petitioner on the 15th September will remain for the present." This appeal is directed against the orders of the 15th September and 19th November.

On behalf of the respondent, a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is incompetent. In answer it has been argued by the appellant that the appeal is competent under clauses (f), (g) and (i) of section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act. In our opinion, it is plain that the appeal is competent under clause (g). The real effect of the orders in question is to remove the appellant from the office of guardian of person and property of the infant, for the order of the 19th November is to remain in operation for an indefinite length of time. It may also be plausibly contended that the case is covered by clause (f). But it is not necessary, for our present purpose, to determine whether clause (f) or (i) is also applicable to the case.

As regards the merits we are of opinion that the orders cannot be sustained, as they were made without any inquiry into the truth or otherwise of the respective allegations of the guardian. On behalf of the respondent, the view has been pressed upon us that as the appellant has made an application for Letters of Administration to the estate of her husband on the basis of an alleged Will, she has become hostile to the infant and is consequently no longer fit to continue as guardian of his property. No information, however, is available as to the terms of the Will and we are unable on the materials before us to say that the conduct imputed to the appellant is of such a description as necessarily disqualifies her for the office of guardian. It is plain that an order of this description should not be made without some inquiry into the allegations made. It is also obvious that the matter should not remain in abeyance till the disposal of the Letters of Administration case, which, it is not improbable, may continue for some length of time. It is desirable that the question of guardianship should be settled as early as practicable.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed and the orders of the 15th September and 19th November set aside. The case will be remitted to the District Judge in order that he may inquire into the allegations made in the application of the 6th June 1913 and determine, upon evidence to be adduced by both parties, whether the appellant should be removed from the office of guardian. In the examination of this question, her conduct as applicant in the Letters of Administration case will necessarily have to be taken into account. There will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

APPELLANT*versus*DURGA PRASAD AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.Execution—Application to revise former application—Former application consigned to record room—Limitation.

In execution of a decree certain property was put up for sale. An objection was filed that a part of the property belonged to a third person. The Court asked the Pleader of the decree-holder to make statement as to that by a certain date. The Pleader failed to make such statement. The Court struck off the application for execution and sent the file to the record room. Three years afterwards another application for execution was made:

Held, that the second application must be treated as an application to revive the former proceedings and was not barred by time.

Execution second appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge of Meerut.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents on August 27th, 1908, obtained a decree absolute for sale of certain property. On December 1st, 1908, they applied for execution of the decree by sale of the property of the the appellant judgment-debtor and also of the share of Musammât Qulsum Bibi and two ladies named Jafri Begum and Askari Begum. The share of Musammât Qulsum Bibi had been definitely excluded from the decree for sale by the decree of an Appellate Court. When the fact was brought to notice that the decree-holders wished to sell the share of Musammât Qulsum Bibi, an order was passed exempting her share from sale. Later on the Collector to whom the proceedings had been transferred discovered that the decree-holders had applied for the sale of the shares of Musammât Jafri Begum and Askari Begum also, and in January 1911 he sent the record back to the Subordinate Judge for orders. On February 2nd, 1911, the Subordinate Judge called upon the Pleader for the decree-holders to make a statement regarding the shares of the two ladies. Further time was allowed to the Pleader more than once and the last date fixed for the purpose of receiving his statement was March 1st, 1911. On May 11th, 1911, the application for execution was struck off and the file was sent to the record room. The present application for execution was made on December 20th, 1913. It was presented more than three years after the date of the last application to the Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution, and the judgment-debtor has pleaded that the application is barred by limitation. The decree-holders, on the other hand, have contended, and their contention has been accepted by both the Courts below, that the present application should be regarded as one made for the purpose of reviving and carrying on an execution proceeding which had been suspended by no act of default on their part. It is true that the decree-holders' Pleader failed to make a statement to the Court regarding the shares of the two ladies Jafri Begum and Askari Begum, but it does not appear that the case was called on for hearing on March 1st, 1911, the last date fixed for receiving the statement of the Pleader. It does not appear that either the decree-holders or their Pleader were even aware of the penalty which would be imposed if they failed to make the statement, and it seems to us that when the Pleader failed to make the statement, the proper course to adopt was to direct that the shares of the two women should not be sold and not to throw out the application altogether. Both the Courts below have held that it was not owing to the default of the decree-holders that their application was consigned to the record room. On the whole, we are of opinion that the view taken by the Courts below is correct and we are not satisfied that the Court, when sending the case to the record room, intended to dismiss the application for execution altogether. In the circumstances we think that the present application may properly be treated as an application to revive the proceedings which were suspended on May 11th, 1911, by the order of the Subordinate Judge consigning the record to the record room. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 17—Appearance—Illness of Pleader—Party present asking for postponement—Appeal dismissed without hearing.

On the date fixed for the hearing of an appeal, the appellant's Pleader was ill and did not appear in Court. The appellant happened to be present in Court and, on the case having been called on, he asked for time to get his Pleader. This was disallowed and the appeal was dismissed without hearing.

Held, that the Court apparently acted under Order XLI, rule 17; that under the circumstances the appeal should be re-admitted; and that the mere presence of the appellant in the Court-room on the day of hearing and his having asked the Court for time to get his Pleader did not constitute appearance of the appellant within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 1st July 1910.

Babu Probodh Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application under Order XLI, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code for re-admission of an appeal dismissed for default. A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies in this Court as the appeal was not dismissed under Order XLI, rule 17. The whole question is, whether there was appearance of the appellant within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code. It appears that 13th of June 1910 was fixed for the hearing of the appeal. The appellant's Pleader was ill that day and did not appear in Court. The appellant happened to be present in Court and, on the case having been called on, he asked for time to get his Pleader. This was disallowed and the appeal was dismissed without hearing. Thereupon, on the 1st of July 1910, the appellant made an application under Order XLI, rule 17, and that application was dismissed by the learned District Judge, on the ground that the appellant had appeared in the case and that the application, therefore, could not come within the scope of Order XLI, rule 19. No doubt the appellant was present in Court. But he had engaged a Pleader to appear at the hearing and argue the appeal for him presumably because he himself could not do so. We are of opinion that the mere presence of the appellant in the Court-room on the day of hearing and his having asked the Court for time to get his Pleader did not constitute appearance of the appellant within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court at once dismissed the appeal without any hearing and apparently acted under Order XLI, rule 17. Under the circumstances, we think that the order of the lower Court dated the 1st of July 1910 should be set aside and the appeal re-admitted. But this must be upon the appellant depositing in the lower Appellate Court within one month of the arrival of the record in the said Court (if not already deposited by him) the costs he was directed to pay by the Judge on the 13th of June 1910. In default, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs. Costs of this appeal will abide the result, the hearing fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

It is not necessary to pass any order in the Rule.

INUGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHALIKANI VENKATASURAYYA.

The mere fact that at the desire of the promisor the promisee has already done something prior to any agreement is not sufficient to make any subsequent agreement - a contract, nor will such agreement amount to a contract if it was no more than a promise to make a gift at the mere will of the promisor. [p. 881, col. 1.]

A promisee cannot, by any act of his own, oblige the promisor to fulfil his promise, nor can there be a legal obligation to do anything, unless a liability to perform the promise, not depending on the mere will of the promisor, is imposed by the promisor upon himself by an agreement, and unless such liability is made to rest upon the services already rendered by the promisee. [p. 881, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether or not the promisor intended to impose upon himself a legal liability, the following points have to be considered, viz., the nature of the services rendered, whether at the time the promise was made there was any outstanding liability on the part of the promisor to remunerate the promisee, whether the services were of a nature for which no compensation was expected and whether they had already been fully compensated for. If there was an outstanding liability, the subsequent promise will be almost conclusive evidence of the value which the parties intended to put upon the liability. [p. 881, col. 2.]

A mere direction in a document to which the plaintiff is not a party, to pay a certain sum to the plaintiff, is not enough to create a trust in his favour. [p. 883, col. 1.]

Where A contracts with B to pay a sum of money to C, the latter cannot sue A merely on the basis of such a contract. In order to enable C to sue, the contract must be intended to secure a benefit to him so that he may be entitled to say that he has a beneficial interest as cestui que trust. It is not possible to lay down categorically and exhaustively the circumstances which have to be considered in order to determine whether or not a contract is intended to secure such a benefit. In consideration of great services rendered to him by the plaintiff and his father, the husband of the defendant (a zemindar) had agreed to pay the plaintiff a salary of Rs. 20 a month during the life-time of the plaintiff. This agreement was adverted to in a deed whereunder the zemindar usufructually mortgaged his estate in favour of his wife, the latter being asked to pay the salary to the plaintiff. This arrangement was acted upon by the defendant till some time after her husband's death, when she refused to continue the payment. The plaintiff thereupon sued for the recovery of the salary:

Held, that there was an enforceable contract between the plaintiff and the defendant's husband, and that the clause in the mortgage-deed constituted a trust in favour of the plaintiff. [p. 885, col. 2; p. 886, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 129 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Peddapur, in Original Suit No. 211 of 1909.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, with him Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant:—The Courts below have confused the position of the defendant. She is not only the late zemindar's legal representative, but was also his mortgagee. If the claim against the defendant is based on the ground that she was the mortgagee and was directed by the instrument of mortgage to make the payment to the plaintiff, the simple answer is that unless he can show that there was a trust in his favour, he has no locus standi to sue, as he was not privy to the contract. See Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (1). Clause 31 of the mortgage-deed, which is the only relevant provision, can hardly be said to create a trust. That evidences only an obligation undertaken by the defendant to continue the payment to the plaintiff. It does not create any charge upon any property, nor is there a trust. There is absolutely no evidence that the contract between the husband and the wife was communicated to the plaintiff and accepted by him so as to constitute a novatio. A novation presupposes the existence of a legal, valid and binding contract between the plaintiff and the zemindar. The consideration alleged for the original contract is services rendered to the zemindar. They could not give rise to any obligation to pay unless they had been rendered with the expectation of being remunerated therefor. It may be that the payments are mere gifts and are to be made only during the pleasure of the zemindar. If so the defendant was entitled to revoke the promise. It, therefore, becomes necessary to inquire into the circumstances which led up to the contract. The nature of the services and the relationship of the parties are in favour of the inference that the payments are revocable. In any event the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is defective in not having considered all the above facts. (The question of merger of mortgage was not pressed.)

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Respondent:—That there was a contract between the plaintiff and the late zemindar is beyond all doubt. It has been so found by the Court. Then, the zemindar became involved and had to execute the mortgage, Exhibit B. As part of the arrangement it was expressly agreed that plaintiff was to be paid the Rs. 20 a month which had been agreed to be paid to him. The principle that a third person cannot sue on a contract to which he was not a party does not apply in this case, as the defendant was a transferee of all the properties of the zemindar. Moreover, the contract is under section 37 of the Indian Contract Act enforceable against the defendant as the legal representative of the promisor. The services having been rendered and accepted there was an outstanding obligation on the part of the zemindar to pay for them and a binding contract can, therefore, be presumed. The contract to pay is irrevocable as it is not subject to any condition or defeasance. The alleged revocation by the zemindar (Exhibit I) has been found against. The defendant cannot be allowed to set up any other revocation at this stage of the case.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 26th day of November 1914, and having stood over for consideration till the 9th day of December 1914, the Court (Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The plaint is to the effect (1) that the plaintiff and his father rendered great services to the defendant's husband, the late zemindar of Kirlampudi; (2) that in consideration of such services the late zemindar agreed to give to the plaintiff a salary of Rs. 20 per mensem during the plaintiff's life-time; (3) that "accordingly the defendant's husband gave possession of his estate to the defendant and executed a deed of mortgage with possession" (viz., Exhibit B on the record) "and asked the defendant to pay the allowances payable to the plaintiff." There is a reference to natural love and affection, but there is no registered document between the plaintiff and the zemindar and section 25 (1) of the Indian Contract Act has not been relied upon. The prayer is that a decree be passed for recovery of the arrears of the alleged allowances after July 1907 from the estate of the late zemindar (who died on 2nd November 1906) in the hands of the defendant.

The written statement denies both (1) the alleged consideration and (2) generally the agreement to pay during the plaintiff's life-time, and raises the contentions (3) that Exhibit B is "indefinite and cannot be legally enforced" and that (4) its terms were controlled by a letter, Exhibit I, alleged to be written by the late zemindar to the defendant, which made the alleged salary payable only during the plaintiff's good behaviour. This last contention need not be dealt with any further, as Exhibit I has been held to be spurious. It is admitted that the defendant is the heir of the deceased zemindar, and it is not denied that she has assets from his estate out of which the plaintiff's claim may be satisfied.

Two entirely distinct cases are alluded to in the plaint and issues which have to be considered separately, though in our opinion they ultimately depend on a determination of the same facts.

One case open to the plaintiff is that there was an unconditional and irrevocable contract between the zemindar and himself for payment to him of Rs. 20 per month so long as he lived; that as the zemindar predeceased the plaintiff, part of the contract has to be performed after the death of the promisor; that that part would be enforceable against the defendant as the legal representative of the promisor under section 37 of the Indian Contract Act, illustration (a), and section 40, illustration (a); and that the fact that the consideration had already been executed prior to the contract would not affect its enforceability.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was a contract to the effect mentioned on which the plaintiff may sue cannot, however, be accepted, as (1) Exhibit B has been referred to even for this aspect of the case not merely as evidence of the contract between the zemindar and the plaintiff, but as if Exhibit B were itself the contract on which the plaintiff could sue, though he is not a party to it; (2) the defendant's position as the legal representative of the zemindar and as a party to Exhibit B have been confused; and (3) no attention has been paid to the question whether the promise by the zemindar was intended to be irrevocable or to be subject to any condition of good behaviour on the part of the plaintiff, or revocable at the mere will of the promisor. This last question is distinct from the defence based on Exhibit I, which was that, as a matter of fact, the promise had been revoked or validly altered.

INUGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHELIKANI VENKATASURAYYA.

The question whether or not the promise by the zemindar was revocable is of great importance to the question whether the promise amounts to a contract, and requires detailed examination.

The only consideration alleged for the contract is past services. The plaintiff could not, therefore, have insisted on the performance of the contract by threatening not to perform his own part of the alleged contract, as there was nothing for the plaintiff to perform. In such a case the promisee cannot, by any act of his own, oblige the promisor to fulfil his promise, nor can there be any legal obligation to do anything, unless a liability to perform the promise (not depending on the mere will of the promisor) is imposed by the promisor upon himself by his agreement, and unless such liability is made to rest upon the acts already done by the promisee.

The mere fact that at the desire of the promisor the promisee has already done something prior to any agreement [Indian Contract Act, section 2 (d)] cannot be sufficient to make any subsequent agreement a contract. It would not amount to a contract if it was no more than a promise to make a gift at the mere will of the promisor [Transfer of Property Act, sections 124, 126]. Whether the zemindar intended to impose a legally enforceable liability upon himself, or whether he merely promised to make a series of gifts, has not been considered by the lower Appellate Court. It is clear that if the zemindar left to himself the option of revoking the promise at his mere will, or of otherwise putting an end to the duration of the promise, that in itself would negative any intention of imposing upon himself a legal liability (which would necessarily be independent of his own will); such a revocable promise could not, therefore, be called a contract at all.

In order to determine whether or not the zemindar intended to impose upon himself a legal liability, the lower Appellate Court ought to have considered (1) the nature of the services rendered by the plaintiff to the zemindar, (2) whether at the time that the zemindar made the promise upon which the plaintiff relies, there was any outstanding liability on the part of the zemindar to remunerate the plaintiff or (3) whether the services were of a nature for which no compensation was expected or (4) which had already been fully compensated for. If there was an outstanding liability, then, as pointed out by Bowen, L. J., in In re Casey's Patents, Stewart v. Casey (2), the subsequent promise may be almost conclusive evidence of the value that the parties intended to put upon the liability. On the other hand, there might have been no outstanding liability either because the remuneration which was legally due to the plaintiff had already been paid prior to the promise, or because, apart from an express promise to remunerate, the plaintiff did not expect any remuneration. Whether there was any expectation of remuneration would depend (amongst other things) upon the nature of the service. The effect of section 2 (d) of the Indian Contract Act upon each of these distinct sets of circumstances might be different. Where acts have been done in the past which might or might not (at the opinion of a party) support a contract, it has to be determined whether the party did, as a matter of fact, desire to place his liability on that foundation. There must be not only the intention to create a liability, but that intention must be given effect to by reference to consideration, though the consideration may be already executed.

None of these matters have been adverted to by the lower Appellate Court, nor are there findings on them from which any legal inference may be drawn either in favour of or against the plaintiff on the question, whether the zemindar intended to enter into an enforceable contract in consideration of past services, or whether the past services of the plaintiff were only a motive for promise, the performance of which was intended to depend on the mere will of the zemindar.

The second aspect of the case depends upon Exhibit B as its foundation.

In this aspect the plaintiff can succeed only if Exhibit B was such a transaction with reference to the plaintiff as to bring him within any exception to the rule which prevents a person who is not privy to a contract from enforcing it—for Exhibit B was a mortgage between the defendant and her husband, and the plaintiff is not a party to the document. The exceptions to that rule have been considered in Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (1). For the present purpose it may be stated that this aspect of the plaintiff's case depends upon whether or not Exhibit B—or rather clause 31 thereof on which the plaintiff relies, "though in form it is a contract to which the plaintiff was not a party, was intended to secure a benefit to the plaintiff so that the plaintiff is entitled to say that he has a beneficial right as cestui que trust under that contract." [See per Cotton and Bowen, L. JJ., in Gandy v. Gandy (3).] To this aspect of the plaintiff's case the existence or non-existence of any prior contract binding the zemindar would be only indirectly relevant. The prior contract would merely indicate the history or the motive for the creation of the trust (assuming that a trust was created) by Exhibit B. The liability of the defendant would in this aspect arise (if at all) as a party to Exhibit B; her character as legal representative of the zemindar would not be material.

(2) (1832) 1 Ch. D. 104 at p. 115; 61 L. J. Ch. 61; 66 L. T. 93; 40 W. R. 180.

The direction in Exhibit B to pay to the plaintiff is not enough to create a trust in his favour. When A simply contracts with B to pay money to C, C cannot merely on the basis of such a contract sue A [In re Empress Engineering Co. (4)]. In order to enable C to sue, the contract must (as we have already said) be intended to secure benefit to the plaintiff, so that the plaintiff is entitled to say that he has a beneficial right cestui que trust. The circumstances which have to be considered in order to determine whether the contract is intended so to secure a benefit cannot, of course, be categorically and exhaustively laid down. But the following four considerations may be referred to [see Wall v. Bright (5), Shaw v. Foster (6) and the cases cited in Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (1)]. It must be determined (1) whether the defendant was made a trustee for the plaintiff by Exhibit B or whether her position was merely such that she might become a trustee if certain events were to take place which were contemplated in Exhibit B; (2) if she was made or had become a trustee, had she any personal and substantial interest in the property (viz., as wife and presumptive heir of the zemindar or as mortgagee) which she had a right to protect, or did the contract override any interest of her own in the property; in other words; (3) was any specific property charged with the payment to the plaintiff in which the defendant was to have no beneficial interest whatever; (4) was Exhibit B communicated to the plaintiff, and did he accept it in lieu of any rights that he had prior to Exhibit B.

The defendant's position as the mortgagee and as the wife and presumptive heir of the zemindar might have important bearing on the question involved in the consideration above referred to. Assuming that she agreed to become a trustee for the plaintiff, did she agree to do so in derogation of her own present and presumptive interest in the property, or merely in so far as her rights as mortgagee and heir were not affected. For if the zemindar made the defendant trustee of so much of the property as would produce an income of Rs. 20 per month, and the trust was to subsist after the death of the zemindar, the defendant would not become absolutely entitled to that property until after the death of the plaintiff. Was that the intention of the parties? Was it intended by the zemindar and agreed by the defendant that the trust was to subsist only so long as the zemindar (and after him his representative) did not revoke the directions in Exhibit B, or was that payment to continue independently of the zemindar's will? Hence the real question in this aspect of the case also is whether the zemindar intended (at the time when Exhibit B was executed) to create a liability binding upon himself and the defendant in her dual capacity of mortgagee and the zemindar's representative, or whether it was a mere revocable promise without any legal obligation. This question cannot be conclusively decided by reference to clause 31 of Exhibit B, which is consistent with either view.

INUGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHELIKANI VENKATASURAYYA.

What is important, however, is that the plaintiff, in order to rely upon Exhibit B, has to establish not only the same facts which he would have to establish for succeeding on the first aspect of his case, but if he wishes to rely upon Exhibit B as giving him a distinct cause of action, he would also have to establish in effect that the defendant consented to become a party to the zemindar's contract with the plaintiff.

This becomes clearer by referring to the facts. The plaintiff claims on a two-fold basis that the zemindar (1) agreed to pay, (2) made what may be called a trust for payment. The trust is not explicit, and in order to determine whether the clause in question did create a trust, it has to be determined, amongst other things, whether it was meant that the zemindar himself and his legal representative were to have no control over the property alleged to be impressed with the trust, or whether any option was reserved to the zemindar and this legal representative of not acting upon the clause, and thus liberating the property in question from the trust: in other words, did the zemindar intend to place on himself and his legal representative an irrevocable liability to pay or did he not. Section 78 of the Indian Trusts Act is not alleged to be applicable and clauses (b) and (c) need not be considered.

It was argued before us for the defendant that the plaintiff's right to receive the payment as against the defendant would be co-terminous with the existence of the mortgage created by Exhibit B and that as the defendant became owner of the properties mortgaged, the mortgage must be taken to have merged (Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act). The argument is curiously inverted from the shape it took in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premeekhdas (7) (and the shape it would ordinarily take), inasmuch as it is the mortgagee who asserts that the mortgage is merged and a third party who denies the merger. The question, however, whether the mortgage subsists or not, except in so far as that question is involved in those that we have already referred to, does not affect the rights of the plaintiff, for the plaintiff can sue the defendant only if and in so far as she is either a representative of the zemindar or a trustee on behalf of himself. It may be that the mortgage has merged and yet the trust (if it was ever created) would subsist; on the other hand, if the direction to pay did not create a trust, then the subsistence of the mortgage would not create it. If it be the fact, as the plaintiff claims, that there was a trust created in his favour by Exhibit B, then the property impressed with the trust would go out of the private property of the zemindar and be held by the defendant not as the mortgaged property, nor as the zemindar's property after his death, but as trust property: to such property, consequently, the defendant would not become "absolutely entitled" (See Transfer of Property Act, section 101) on the zemindar's death, and no question of merger would arise. If there was no trust created, it is an academic question, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, whether the mortgage subsists or is merged. The question of trust is of no other importance except to establish the plaintiff's right to the allowance; for there is no question of want of assets, or of following the property in the hands of an alienee.

The lower Appellate Court must be asked to submit a finding on the question, whether the zemindar agreed to impose upon himself a legal liability to pay the sum of Rs. 20 a month to the plaintiff. In arriving at a finding on this question the lower Appellate Court will deal specifically with the various subsidiary questions of fact and law indicated above. The finding will be submitted in six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with—the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry at Cocanada submitted the following

FINDING.—In obedience to the order of the High Court calling for a finding on the question

"Whether the zemindar agreed to impose upon himself a legal liability to pay the sum of Rs. 20-0-0 a month to the plaintiff"

I beg to submit the following finding:—

2. As observed by their Lordships the suit is to recover arrears of grant or salary at the rate of Rs. 20-0-0 per mensem during the plaintiff's life-time. The claim is based on two grounds:—

INGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHELIKANI VENKATASURAYYA.

(1) as the promise under a contract between the plaintiff and the zemindar;

(2) as a beneficiary under a trust created by means of Exhibit B.

The consideration for the contract is said to be the services rendered to the zemindar by the plaintiff.

3. The defendant's case is, not that the services rendered should in law be held inadequate for the purpose of invalidating the contract, but her plea is that no services were rendered at all. It leaves room, therefore, for the inference that, if the plaintiff had rendered any services, the defendant does not intend to question the value put upon such services.

4. As regards the value of the services rendered, I should think the value put upon them by the parties to the contract should be accepted, taking the position, the status and the remuneration offered and other things existing in the case into consideration, unless there is any evidence of any pressure or undue influence necessitating an over-valuation, or rendering the contract void or illegal. There is no evidence, or even an allegation, that any pressure or undue influence was brought to bear upon the zemindar with reference to the contract under consideration. It cannot be denied that the plaintiff's family has been connected with the estate of the zemindar for at least two generations. The plaintiff's father was the personal guardian of a late zemindar. Even the interested defendant's 1st witness admits it. When the defendant's witnesses say that the plaintiff and the zemindar were not friends, or that the plaintiff rendered no kind of service, they do not seem to state any truth. The plaintiff is not a beggar.....He is a relation of the zemindar and it may be a remote relation. The defendant's 1st witness states that the zemindar used to address the plaintiff as bava (Telugu). The defendant's 2nd witness and the plaintiff state that the plaintiff had his meals in the zemindar's kitchen.....The plaintiff states he was allowed to go as a rajabandhu (Telugu). The plaintiff in his evidence states that he was a personal attendant upon the zemindar, meaning that he was neither a menial servant nor a married person, but a poor relation of the zemindar, entitled to have an equal status so far as social relations went. He also states that the zemindar used to consult him on some points and take advice. He swears that he gave up his paternal estate in favour of his brother and settled at the zemindar's head-quarters to keep him company and to render him any services he could do. The plaintiff and the zemindar were friends and companions from youth. The plaintiff had a position to maintain and a reputation to lose. He was Chairman for some years of Jagapathinagaram, which fact shows he had a social status. It is not possible to categorically state the services rendered during nearly a life-time, or to adduce any direct evidence thereof. As he made several sacrifices at the suggestion of the zemindar, he was promised a salary of Rs. 20 per month for his life and that promise was introduced in the mortgage-deed executed to the defendant. He swears that the understanding was that the salary agreed to be paid was not to last at the pleasure of the zemindar or of anybody else, but to last for his life. I do not see any reason to disbelieve the plaintiff, while there are ample grounds to discredit the evidence on the defendant's side. The defendant does not seem to dispute her liability if the plaintiff continued in her good graces. She wanted to make the contract a revocable one and put forward a document to prove the revocable nature of the contract, but that document has been held a spurious one, brought about at her instance by her interested witnesses. After all, the charge of misbehaviour brought against the plaintiff seems to be that he gave evidence on behalf of his cousin in a criminal case brought by the defendant against him. I am not sure that, if he has given true evidence, he could be charged with any misbehaviour. The frame of the 2nd issue shows that the plaintiff's case is that, primarily there was a contractual liability undertaken by the zemindar and subsequently a transfer thereof to the defendant with her consent. With reference to the contract between the zemindar and the plaintiff there is not much evidence. The plaintiff alone speaks to it and a lot of other circumstances are relied upon in corroboration of the plaintiff's evidence. There is no evidence to the contrary. The zemindar, the promisor, is dead and the liability has been transferred to the defendant under

INUGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHELIKANI VENKATASURAYYA.

Exhibit B with her consent. The two facts account for the paucity of more direct evidence on the contract itself. The direction to pay the plaintiff in the document Exhibit B is a circumstance to presume a contract existing behind it as basis. No doubt the plaintiff, who was no party to Exhibit B, cannot rely upon that document as the contract itself, but from the allegations in the plaint, from the frame of the 2nd issue and from his evidence, it is clear that the plaintiff relies upon a contract apart from Exhibit B, and relies upon Exhibit B as some evidence of contract which formed as the basis of the trust he alleges in his favour. The plaintiff swears that the grant was to hold good for his life and irrevocable and the plaintiff was not only being paid the amount contracted for both during the interval between the date of Exhibit B and the zemindar's death but also for sometime after the zemindar's death. There is no reliable evidence to show that there was any valid revocation of the contract, even assuming for a moment that the zemindar had the option to withdraw. That the intention of the parties to the contract was that it was to be in force for the plaintiff's life, is inferable from clauses 31 and 33 of Exhibit B. Considering the services rendered and the sacrifices made to the knowledge of and at the suggestion of the zemindar himself, it looks to me that a man in the socially high position of a zemindar intended, and should have intended, to bind himself to that contract rendering himself liable to pay the petty monthly allowance to the plaintiff. The plaintiff did expect to be remunerated for whatever services he rendered and he was not disappointed in his expectations.

It might be that the plaintiff was remunerated to a certain extent when it was in the power of the zemindar to remunerate, but there is no proof that the plaintiff had been fully compensated for the services rendered by him. I, therefore, find that as a matter of contract between the plaintiff and the zemindar, the latter intended to contract, and contracted, to render himself liable to pay the monthly allowance for the plaintiff's life-time. I may in this connection refer to the absence of any qualifying clause in Exhibit B such as "so long as the plaintiff renders service or at the pleasure of the payer or until revoked" as adding strength to the above conclusion regarding the intention of the parties on the other hand, past services being the consideration for the grant of a monthly allowance, no such qualifying clause was considered relevant or necessary. Exhibit I, by which the defendant attempted to qualify the grant, has been found spurious. The plaintiff admits he has not been rendering any service to the defendant now. All these only show that the grant of allowance was absolute and unconditional for the plaintiff's life. The defendant, as her husband's heir to the estate, is bound to perform her husband's contract.

5. Again, the defendant is sought to be held liable to the plaintiff in another aspect, namely, as a trustee. The author of the trust is the zemindar. The defendant, the alienee of the estate, is the trustee. The plaintiff is the beneficiary and the maintenance of the plaintiff is the purpose of the trust, which is not unlawful. Exhibit B clearly indicates an intention to create a trust. Exhibit B was not a hasty or an ill-considered document. It was brought into existence after some correspondence regarding the terms. Even the defendant's 2nd witness states that the allowances sought to be payable by the defendant were.....payable only if the defendant consented to the said terms in Exhibit B. The defendant had admittedly paid the plaintiff for several months and expressed her consent thereto; thus a clear intention to create a trust in favour of a poor relation and friend of the zemindar is clearly inferable from the evidence on record. The defendant took the mortgage subject to the plaintiff's liability. This suit was originally filed as a Small Cause Suit but since Small Cause Courts have no jurisdiction to try suits relating to trust, the plaint was returned and filed as an original suit in the Munsif's Court. So the plaintiff's claim, as put forward from its inception, has been a case of a trust in his favour. The circumstance that he has authorised the defendant to pledge the estate if the income therefrom should at any time fall short and be found deficient to pay any of these allowances, shows that the zemindar intended the grant to be binding on the estate. Reading sections 6 and 8 of the Indian Trusts Act, I find that the facts of this case go to establish a trust for the benefit of the plaintiff. I do not see any indefiniteness about it when the purpose of the trust suggests that that liability was to hold good for the life of the beneficiary. The wording is the same in regard to the payments to the zemindar, his mother and others provided for in Exhibit B. Exhibit B looks and reads as if it is a family settlement. The defendant's status as a wife is recognised in clause 29, as distinguished from that of a mortgagee. I also find that the trust is based on a prior enforceable contract. The plaintiff states that he was present at the registration of Exhibit B and there is no evidence to the contrary. Exhibit B has been proved to have been fair-copied from a draft made, approved of and sent by the defendant. The defendant has made payments of the allowances to the plaintiff for some time. Nothing more seems to be required to infer consent on the part of the trustee. The plaintiff, who knew of the execution of Exhibit B, has accepted the arrangement, which was also consented to by the defendant, but the trust, I should think, relates only to the period of the existence of the mortgagee's interest possessed by the defendant. The trust was completed when the defendant began to pay the plaintiff. In this case the defendant's rights are not only that of a mortgagee but also that of an heir to the estate. She would be a trustee as a mortgagee and not as the heir who succeeded to the equity of redemption. If the mortgage disappears, she would be the heir to the whole estate and would cease to be a trustee, but nonetheless she would be liable to pay the plaintiff as the heir of her husband, who had contracted this liability and who is not shown to have gone beyond his legal rights to charge the estate with his liability. (See Indian Contract Act, section 25, clause 2 and Explanation 2.) No doubt, the parties did not contemplate that the zemindar would die and that the mortgagee would become the heir. If the heir and the mortgagee should be two different persons and if the heir happens to be in possession after the discharge of the mortgage and the consequent extinguishment of the trust, he would be liable to pay on the basis of a contract and if the mortgage subsists the mortgagee or her assignees and heirs would be liable as trustee.

6. For these reasons my finding is that the zemindar agreed to impose upon himself a legal liability to pay the sum of Rs. 20 a month to the plaintiff.

[The second appeal was finally heard, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court, by Tyabji and Phillips, JJ.]

Messrs. T. Prakasam and P. Chenchia, for the Appellant, argued that due consideration had not been given by the lower Appellate Court to the various points mentioned in the judgment of their Lordships calling for a finding in this case, that some of the points had not been alluded to and that such a finding could not be accepted.

Mr. G. Venkatramiah, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding which is one purely of fact. We see no reason for thinking that the learned Subordinate Judge did not give due consideration to the various points mentioned in the judgment calling for findings. Several, though perhaps not all, of the points have been alluded to by him.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Lease before Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Notice to quit—Time to be calculated according to Bengali Calendar.

With reference to notice to quit in cases of tenancy created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, six months should, according to the practice in this country, be calculated according to the Bengali Calendar. [p. 887, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, second Court, at Hooghly, dated the 26th May 1903, reversing that of the Munsif, second Court, Howrah, dated the 29th November 1902.

RAJ BEHARI NATH v. KAILAS CHANDRA DUTT.

Maulvi Mahomed Yusuff, Babus Mahendra Nath Ray and Krishna Prasad Sarbadhicary, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in an action for ejectment on the ground of service of notice to quit. The tenancy was admittedly created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and it is conceded before me that that Act has no operation as regards the rights of the parties.

The notice was served, I take it upon the findings, on the 30th Aswin 1308=16th October 1901. It required the tenants to quit after the 30th Chait 1308=13th April 1902. If we calculate according to the current Bengali Calendar, the notice was one to quit after the expiry of six months and after the end of the year of tenancy.

Since the decision of this Court in the case of Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal (1), it has been the practice in the country to cause notices to quit to be served in the month of Aswin, the notice requiring the tenants to quit at the end of Chaitra following, as six months intervene between 30th Aswin and 30th Chait. In the present case, however, the Subordinate Judge has, in calculating the period of six months, adopted the Gregorian year, or speaking more accurately, the English Calendar.

There is no Statute, Act or Regulation with reference to notices to quit in cases of tenancy created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. The General Clauses Acts of 1868 and 1887 and 1897 (Imperial Council) do not touch the question before me, as the terms "month" and "year" as there defined relate to words used in Statutes or Acts. The decision in Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal (1) does not lay down any positive rule of law. It merely indicates what equity and good conscience would dictate. Under such circumstances, I think, the lower Appellate Court is wrong in making the calculation of six months according to the English Calendar. The six months should according to the practice in this country be calculated according to the Bengali Calendar with which the people are familiar. There is nothing inequitable or unjust in the calculation of months according to the Bengali Calendar. The decision of the lower Appellate Court should, therefore, be reversed and the case remitted to that Court for consideration of the other points raised. The appellant will be entitled to his costs of this appeal. The other costs will be dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Babu Rajendra Chunder Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in an action in ejectment. The sole question in controversy at this stage is, whether the notice to quit served by the plaintiff on the defendants is sufficient in law to terminate the tenancy. In the decision of this question, the assumption has been made that the defendants are entitled to a six months' notice terminating with a year of their tenancy, provided that it be ultimately found that the defendants hold a tenancy which can at all be legally terminated by a notice to quit. The Subordinate Judge has found on this basis that the notice is sufficient and has remanded the case for adjudication on the merits.

On the 19th Aswin 1318, which corresponded to the 16th October 1911, the plaintiff served the defendants with notice to quit on the last day of Chaitra, 1318, which corresponded to the 13th April, 1912. The defendants maintain that if they are at all liable to be ejected, they are entitled to six months' notice calculated according to the British Calendar. The contention of the plaintiff is that the defendants are entitled to notice of the requisite period calculated according to the Bengali Calendar. In support of the latter view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Gopi Nath Chongdar v. Abdul Gafur (1), Hari Das Tanti v. Upendra Narain Shaha (2) and Debendra Nath Bhowmik v. Syama Prosanna Bhowmik (3). On behalf of the defendants-appellants, it has been contended that these cases are distinguishable, because in each of them the tenancy had been created before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation and consequently no question arises as to the rights and liabilities of the parties under section 106 thereof. In the present case, it is said that the tenancy must be deemed, for the decision of the present question at any rate, to have been created on the 11th December 1885, although it is not disputed that there was a pre-existing tenancy which dated back at least to the 8th March 1878, if not to an earlier period, and was confirmed on the 16th March 1879. It is needless to determine whether a new tenancy was or was not created in 1885; we shall assume, for the purposes of the present argument and for that purpose alone, that a new tenancy was then created and that the rights and obligations of the parties in respect of ejection must be determined according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The question arises, what is the effect of section 106?

Section 106 provides that in the absence of a contract or local law, or usage to the contrary, a lease of immoveable property for agricultural purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year, terminable on the part of either lessor or lessee by six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy. On behalf of the appellants it is urged, with reference to section 4 sub-section (1), of the General Clauses Act, 1897, read with clauses (33) and (59) of section 3, that the terms 'year' and 'month' mean year and month calculated according to the British Calendar. In our opinion this contention is of no avail to the appellant. The terms of the lease of 1885 show that there was an implied contract that the tenancy would be held from year to year according to the Bengali Calendar. The rent is made payable in instalments on certain specified dates which are the last days of months of the Bengali year, and there is no room for doubt or controversy that the parties intended that the tenancy would be regulated according to the Bengali year. If, then, there is a tenancy from year to year on the basis of a year calculated according to the Bengali Calendar, it is impossible to maintain the view that a month of that year must be calculated according to the British Calendar; clearly the month must also be calculated according to the Bengali year. Consequently the defendants are entitled to six months' notice, calculated according to the Bengali Calendar, and expiring with the end of a year of their tenancy, which terminates with the Bengali year. From this point of view, the objection urged by the defendants turns out to be groundless. The notice was served on the 29th Aswin 1318 and the defendants were required to quit by the end of Chaitra 1318; consequently they had six months' notice terminating with a year of their tenancy. This was strict compliance with the requirements of the law.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought for the partition of a bariki service inam, which was enfranchised in 1905 in the name of the 1st defendant. The contesting defendants were the purchasers from the 1st defendant and three of his sons by a sale-deed executed in 1906. The plaintiff was a purchaser from the 1st defendant's eldest son and two of his brothers in 1909. The brothers' share in the joint family property being two-thirds and the 1st defendant's sons' being 1/15th, the claim of the plaintiff was to recover 11/15ths of the whole inam. He got a decree accordingly in the first Court which was confirmed in appeal.

The first question now raised is whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had a saleable interest prior to enfranchisement. The short answer to this is that the sale through Exhibit B, having been executed on 21st September 1909 subsequent to the enfranchisement, passed all the rights which they then possessed. There was a previous agreement to sell in 1906, which does not affect the question. At that date Chellamma, the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, was, it is suggested, alive. The Subordinate Judge found that she died five or six years ago, which comes to about 1906 or 1907. If she was alive at the time of the sale, it is argued that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no right to convey the shares which were still in the holding of their mother. If the finding of the Subordinate Judge is correct, as we must assume it to be, Chellamma was certainly not alive at the date of the sale in 1909. But reliance is placed on section 10, clause 2, of Madras Act II of 1894, which runs as follows:—

"The succession to all hereditary village offices shall devolve on a single heir according to the general custom and rule of primogeniture governing succession to impartible zemindaris in Southern India." It is contended that this provision takes away the rights of any persons who claim any joint interest in the emoluments of the office. When the lands were enfranchised exclusively in the name of the 1st defendant after he had succeeded to the bariki appointments as the daughter's son of the original male holder, it is contended that none of his brothers retained any interest therein.

KARRI RAMAYYA v. VILLOORI JAGANNADHAM.

We are clearly of opinion that the effect of enfranchisement is not to destroy the rights of any members of a joint family which has a hereditary interest in the inam. This question was fully considered in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (1) and the conclusion arrived at was, that service inams which are enfranchised are impressed in the hands of the registered holder with the same character as if they had devolved upon him as ordinary property, independently of the hereditary office, and the registered owner will hold them as joint family property liable to partition. Section 10, clause 2, of Madras Act II of 1894 in terms deals with the succession to village offices which it declares to be governed by the rule of primogeniture. There is nothing in the wording of the section to affect the family title to the lands which form the emoluments of the office, although in cases where the property gets into the hands of a stranger the Act contains provisions for its recovery. Such was the case dealt with in Venkata v. Rama (2). The subsequent decision in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (1) places the rights of the members of a joint family claiming an interest to a hereditary village office on a sound footing. In the present case, the history of the dealings of this family with the lands to which the lower Courts have referred does not admit of any question being raised at this stage as to the hereditary nature of the inam and the mirasi rights which the family possessed in it. Nor can we consider what the rights of the parties would be if the family had been divided when the succession opened, as there was no evidence or admission of division and the point has not been taken in the memorandum of second appeal.

The next question that has been raised is whether property which descends on daughter's sons from their maternal grandfather is ancestral property in which the grandsons take an interest at birth according to the Mitakshara Law. If this question is answered in the negative, the 1st defendant's son, who is the 7th defendant, had no right to sell a 1/15th share to the contesting respondents and all that they can rightly claim is the two-thirds share of the 2nd and 3rd defendants. This question was definitely answered in the affirmative in Vythinatha Ayyar v. Yaggia Narayana Ayyar (3), and the same question was answered in the negative in Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partap (4), and it is apparent from the notes to paragraph 275 in the 7th and 8th Editions of Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, that the learned author and editor feels doubts as to the correctness of the Madras decision. We have been asked to refer the matter to a Full Bench. But we do not consider that this case is of sufficient importance to warrant a reference, or that the state of the law is really in any uncertainty so far as this Court is concerned.

It was pointed out by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that, where the word 'ancestral' (estate) is used in Colebrook's Mitakshara, the correct translation is 'grand-paternal' and the word in the original text is 'paternal grandfather.' They proceeded to discuss the meaning of the words 'ancestral property' and decided that in the Mitakshara they were used in the limited sense of "property in which the sons acquire by birth a joint interest with their father;" and they observed: "It is a well known rule of the Mitakshara Law that property may be joint property without having been ancestral." They thus interpret the use, by the Privy Council, of the words 'ancestral property' in Venkaityamma Garu v. Venkatarāmanayamma Bahadur Garu (5), in the broad sense of property of a joint family to which the rule of survivorship applies.

In Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (6), the question again arose as to what might be regarded as ancestral property, and the Full Bench observed: "Under the Mitakshara joint family system there can be no joint family property in respect of which the male issue of the joint owners will not by birth become joint owners with their father. [See Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (7)]. If, therefore, we are to understand the expression 'ancestral property' in their Lordships' judgment otherwise than in its technical sense, according to which it is property in which a son on his birth becomes an equal owner with his father, the result of the ruling will be that a species of joint family property unknown to the Mitakshara will be brought into existence." Similar observations occur in Muniswami Chetty v. Maruthammal (8), which was also a case decided by a Full Bench.

It is urged that these observations are of the nature of obiter dicta. They may not have been necessary for the decision of the points arising in those cases, but they are sufficient to indicate a clear trend of decision by this Court in only one direction, and that is in favour of grandsons taking an interest at birth in property which descends from their maternal grandfather. The Full Bench also supported their opinion by reference to certain texts in which a daughter's son is treated as being as good as a son's son for spiritual purposes. The earlier decisions in Muttayan Chetty v. Sangali Vira Pandia Chinna Tambiar (9) and Sivaganga Zemindar v. Lakshmana (10) cannot be allowed to influence our decision, seeing that they were considered and discussed in the Full Bench decision in Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (6), to which we have referred. Again, it is argued that a later decision of the Privy Council in Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (11) throws light on what they meant by the use of the word 'ancestral', but we think that as their Lordships were here dealing with a case of Punjab Customary Law it would not be right to give the expressions employed the significance that they might otherwise bear.

The next argument put forward on behalf of the appellants is that they are entitled to remain in possession under a mortgage-deed dated 12th April 1900 until the mortgage is redeemed. This question was not raised in the written statement, nor was there any issue on the point. It is sufficient answer to this contention to say that section 5 of Madras Act III of 1895 makes it unlawful to alienate the emoluments of village offices or to encumber them in any manner whatsoever, and it was held in Narahari Sahu v. Sira Korithan Naidu (12) and in Batchu Ramayya v. Dara Satchi (13) that the alienation of a service inam was wholly void and that though the inam was, at a later date, enfranchised, the alienee could not invoke section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act in his favour. These decisions follow the decision in Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetty (14) and make it clear that the appellants cannot set up any right on the strength of their usufructuary mortgage as against the purchasers under a valid sale-deed.

The last contention is that Rs. 10 was the figure arrived at as the mesne profits of the total holding and that, therefore, the plaintiff should not have been given a decree for mesne profits of more than 11/15ths of this sum. The District Munsif stated that the plaintiff claimed at the rate of Rs. 10 a year and that the contesting defendants did not object to it, and he found accordingly that Rs. 10 a year was the sum to which the plaintiff was entitled. The appellants cannot be allowed to raise the contention that by this finding of fact the District Munsif meant that the profits from the whole holding were only Rs. 10.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

RAJ KUMAR SARKAR v. FAIZUDDI TARAFDAR.

—Enhancement of rent—Agreement in favour of some of the landlords.

A claim for recovery of arrears of rent was based on a kabuliyat. The kabuliyat recited that the tenants held an ancestral jama of ten bighas at an annual rent of Rs. 6-15 under the plaintiff, his co-sharers and a lady named Jadumonee Dasi. The tenants agreed by the kabuliyat that from the date thereof they would hold the land in the share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers at the rate of Rs. 18-6. The co-sharers were joined as defendants, and they did not object to the plaintiff's claim of his share only. Jadumonee was not made a party:

Held, that the agreement to pay enhanced rent was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and consequently unenforceable; [p. 892, col. 2.]

that the kabuliyat might, however, be used as evidence of an agreement that the defendants would from the date thereof pay rent to the plaintiff and his co-sharers separately from Jadumonee; and [p. 892, col. 2.]

that a decree might be made in favour of the plaintiff to the extent of his share. [p. 893, col. 1.]

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose and Bhudeb Chandra Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The claim is based on a kabuliyat executed on the 11th February 1898 by the tenants in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, who have been joined as defendants in the suit. The tenants contend that the kabuliyat was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that they are consequently not liable to pay rent at the rate mentioned therein. In our opinion this contention is well founded and must prevail.

The kabuliyat recites that the tenants held an ancestral jama of 10 bighas at an annual rent of Rs. 6-15 under the plaintiff, his co-sharers and a lady named Jadumonee Dasi. The tenants agreed by the kabuliyat that from the date thereof they would hold the land in the share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers at the rate of Rs. 18-6. This was clearly in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It cannot be maintained that a new tenancy was created by the kabuliyat. The land remained the same, as before, and yet the defendants undertook to pay to the plaintiff and his co-sharers a much larger sum than what they used to pay to these persons and Jadumonee. In fact, if they had by this contract agreed to pay Rs. 18-6 to the plaintiff, his co-sharers and Jadumonee, the contract would have been in contravention of section 29 and consequently unenforceable. The position may be made obvious by a concrete illustration. If A holds 16 bighas under X and Y for Rs. 16 a year, the maximum enhancement to which he can consent is Rs. 2. If he executes a fresh kabuliyat in favour of X and agrees to pay him for his share of the land more than Rs. 9, the agreement is void. If this view were not taken wherever land is held under several landlords jointly, the object of section 29 may be defeated by the device of fresh distinct kabuliyats in favour of the different landlords. We hold, accordingly, in concurrence with the Courts below, that the plaintiff and his co-sharers are not entitled to claim rent at the rate of Rs. 18-6 from the defendants on the basis of the kabuliyat of the 11th February 1898.

We have next to consider another point on which the Courts below have taken divergent views.

The Court of first instance held that although Jadumonee had not been joined as a party to this litigation, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for his share of the rent at the original rate. The Sub-ordinate Judge has held that as the contract of the 11th February 1898 for payment of increased rent was void under section 29, it was inoperative for all purposes and could not be deemed a valid agreement to pay rent separately thenceforward to the persons in whose favour the kabuliyat was executed. In our opinion, this view is unsound. The kabuliyat had a two-fold purpose, namely, to make the rent payable thereafter separately to the different landlords, and, secondly, to enhance the rate of rent; the second object may not have been achieved; but that is no reason why the first purpose should be defeated. We hold accordingly that the kabuliyat may be used as evidence of an agreement that the defendants would from the date thereof pay rent to the plaintiff and his co-sharers separately from Jadumonee. In this view, the plaintiff and his co-sharers are entitled to two-thirds of the rent, because, according to the defendants, Jadumonee was interested in the property only to the extent of one-third. The plaintiff, however, in this suit claims rent in respect of his share only, and as no objection appears to have been taken to that course by his co-sharers, a decree may be made in his favour to that extent. The Court of first instance held erroneously that the plaintiff was entitled to one-half, Rs. 6-15; he is really entitled only to one-third of that sum.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees of the Subordinate Judge set aside and decrees made in favour of the plaintiff for rent at the rate of Rs. 2-5 a year. Each party will be entitled to proportionate costs in all the Courts on the basis of the amount now decreed. A self-contained decree will be drawn up in this Court.

Appeals allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 19, scope of—Claim of party entitled to larger sum barred—Party entitled to smaller sum, if can take out execution.

Order XXI, rule 19 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contemplates that a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other should be regarded as a single indivisible order of the Court enforceable only for the balance, that is, the difference between the two sums awarded, and that balance becomes awardable by the Court without the intervention of the parties as soon as the amount of the balance is determined. [p. 893, col. 2; p. 894, col. 1.]

Therefore, though the party entitled to the larger sum would be barred by limitation from recovering the larger sum awarded to him under the decree, that does not entitle the party claiming the smaller sum to take out execution. [p. 894, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the first Class Subordinate Judge at Karwar, in Darkhast No. 153 of 1913.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Mulgaokar and Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is an appeal in execution and the appellant was the original applicant for execution. He is the purchaser of the interest of the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant in Suit No. 74 of 1902, which was a partition suit. On the 31st March 1905, a decree was made in the suit, and the present application is for mesne profits owing under that decree from the 19th December 1900.

The lower Court has found that the mesne profits due amount to Rs. 346-2-8, but admittedly that calculation is incorrect, and the exact sum due for mesne profits would be Rs. 445-8-0. On the other hand, under the same decree the respondents were entitled to costs which, as has now been ascertained, amount to Rs. 855.

The case, therefore, appears to be one for the application of the rule enacted in Order XXI, rule 19. For, this application is made for the execution of the decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other. The sums being unequal, clause (b) of the rule provides that "execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum." It would follow from this provision that the appellant, who under the decree is entitled only to the smaller sum, has no right to apply for execution of the decree. But it is answered the appellant has that right, because the respondents' claim to their costs is barred by limitation. It is admitted that if the respondents' claim to their costs is to be considered as a separate claim apart from the other provisions of the decree, then it is barred under Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. But it is not the fact that the respondents here are seeking to execute the decree in respect of their claim for costs. They are merely using those provisions of the decree to resist the application made by the other side, and I am of opinion that they are entitled to rely upon the decree for that purpose. For, as I read the rule, it contemplates that the decree should be regarded as a single indivisible order of the Court enforceable only for the balance, that is, the difference between the two sums awarded, and that balance becomes awardable by the Court without the intervention of the parties as soon as the amount of the balance is determined. Though the respondents would be barred by limitation from recovering the large sum awarded to them under the decree, that circumstance cannot, I think, avail to enable the appellant to take out execution in a manner expressly forbidden by the rule. On this ground, I think that the appellant's attempt to execute his decree for the smaller sum, without reference to the larger sum which the decree awards to his adversary, must fail.

This is the only point involved in the appeal, though it was suggested by the appellant that there should be a direction to the Court to take further evidence as to the profits of the higher level badiaverg land. In my opinion, however, no case has been made out which would justify us in allowing the appellant, who was the original applicant, to re-inforce the evidence which he elected to give before the lower Court.

The appeal should, therefore, in my judgment, be dismissed with costs.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The appellants were entitled to mesne profits, which were found upon calculation to be the smaller sum recoverable by either of the parties. That sum must, therefore, be taken to have been entered as satisfied under the provision "satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree" contained in Order XXI, rule 19 (b). The respondents were entitled, on the other hand, to the larger sum, consisting of their costs, but were only entitled to recover "so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum" as prescribed in the said Order. The respondents, therefore, were the only parties entitled to take out execution at all and that execution could only be for the balance "after deducting the smaller sum." It cannot, therefore, be said that recovery of the part of their costs set off against that smaller sum was time-barred, because no application could have been made in respect of that part at all. But it can be said that recovery of the balance would be time-barred under the ordinary rule of limitation applicable to the execution of decrees. In fact it has been admitted that recovery of the balance would be time-barred under Article 182 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

Appeal dismissed.

An appeal does not lie against an order of remand in a suit of the nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and valued at less than Rs. 500, because a second appeal is not allowed against the decree of the lower Appellate Court in such a suit. [p. 895, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 12th January 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Goalundo, dated the 8th July 1913.

Babu Phanindra Lal Maitra, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is clearly incompetent. It is directed against an order of remand, made under rule 23 of Order XLI of the Code, in a suit of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and valued at less than Rs. 500. If a decree had been made in the suit by the lower Appellate Court, that decree would have been non-appealable under section 102. Consequently, no appeal lies against the order of remand, for clause (u) of rule 1 of Order XLIII allows an appeal against an order under rule 23 of Order XLI remanding a case, only where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. It may be observed that the pre-existing law in this respect has been changed by the Code of 1908. Under the Code of 1832, an appeal was allowed against an order of remand by clause 28 of section 588, and it was ruled in a long series of decisions that this right of appeal was not restricted by section 586: Kirte v. Ramjan (1); Mathura Nath Ghose v. Nobin Chandra Kundu (2); Agandh Mahto v. Khajah Aliullah (3); Collector of Bijnor v. Jafar Ali Khan (4); Jhanday Lal v. Sarman Lal (5); Mahadev Narsingh v. Ragho Keshav (6); Chinnatambi v. Chinnana (7). Now an appeal does not lie against order of remand in a suit of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and valued at less than Rs. 500, because a second appeal is not allowed against the decree of the lower Appellate Court in such a suit.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed.

Where a number of suits are tried together and one common judgment is pronounced in all of them, the fact that the aggregate value of all the suits is above Rs. 10,000 while the value of the subject-matter of each suit is below Rs. 10,000, does not give right of appeal to the Privy Council. Petitions praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to grant the petitioners a certificate under rules 2 and 3 of Order XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to enable them to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decrees of the High Court, in Appeal No. 277 of 1911 and Second Appeal Nos. 1508 to 1510 of 1912, preferred against those of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam in Original Suit No. 69 of 1910, and of the District Court of Vizagapatam in Appeal Suits Nos. 162, 161 and 160 of 1911, respectively.

FACTS.—The proprietor of a portion of the Uratla Estate instituted a number of suits to eject his tenants and obtained decrees in the Courts below. On appeal the High Court reversed the decrees of the Courts below and held that the lands which formed the subject-matter of the suit were "ryot" lands in the Uratla Estate, and that the suit should, therefore, have been brought in the Revenue Courts and directed the plaintiffs to be presented to the proper Court. The plaintiff filed the present applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of the High Court.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In none of these cases admittedly is the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance ten thousand rupees or upwards, nor does the decree in any of these suits directly or indirectly involve some claim of like amount or value. The fact that a common judgment was pronounced in all the suits and that the aggregate value of all the suits exceeds Rs. 10,000, in our opinion, makes no difference. This appears to us to be the plain meaning of the section and is in accordance with the ruling of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Royal Insurance Co. v. Akhoy Coomar Dutt (1). It is not clear that in Deonarain Singh v. Guni Singh (2) the leave granted was under section 596 corresponding to section 110, and not under section 595 (c) corresponding to section 109 (c). Landlord and tenant—Encroachment by tenant for his own benefit—Adverse possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 144.

A suit for declaration of title to land and for assessment and recovery of rent thereof is in its essence a suit for recovery of a limited interest in land. [p. 896, col. 2.]

Where the defendant has for more than 12 years repudiated the plaintiff's right to receive rent, under Article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, the plaintiff has no enforceable title. [p. 897, col. 1.]

Encroachments made from the waste by a tenant, whether the land taken belongs to the landlord or to a stranger, are presumed to have been made for the benefit of his landlord unless it appears clearly from some act done at the time that the tenant intended to make the encroachments for his own benefit and not to hold them as he held the farm to which the encroachments were adjacent. [p. 897, col. 1.]

As a general rule the intention of the tenant to make an encroachment for his own benefit must be shown at the time when the encroachment is made, but a subsequent severance of the encroachment from the demised premises may have the same effect, if brought to the knowledge of the landlord, although if the landlord is allowed to remain under the belief that the encroachment was held as part of the holding, the tenant might be estopped from denying it. Gobind Chunder Dey Roy, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to land and for assessment and recovery of rent in respect thereof. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendants are his tenants in respect of some lands within his estate, that they have encroached upon the disputed lands which were contiguous to the lands of their tenancy and that they are consequently liable to pay a fair rent for the encroached portion. The defendants plead that their ancestors excavated the disputed tank and that the rent was redeemed. They further contend that they have never paid rent and that the title of the plaintiff to realise rent has been barred by the Statute of Limitation. The Courts below have dismissed the suit.

It is not disputed that more than 12 years before the commencement of the suit, in the course of Settlement proceedings, the defendants asserted to the knowledge of the plaintiff a title to hold the land without payment of rent to him. Their case at the time was that they held the land under a rent-free grant and were under no legal obligation to pay rent therefor to the plaintiff. The question in controversy is, whether the title of the plaintiff to realise rent from the defendants is barred by the Statute of Limitation. In our opinion, the question must be answered against the plaintiff.

The plaintiff seeks to assert his right to a limited interest in the land. This is plain from the frame of the suit, which he describes as a suit for declaration of title to land and for assessment and recovery of rent thereof. The valuation of the suit is stated, for purposes of jurisdiction and for payment of Court-fees, to be based on the estimated value of the disputed land together with the amount of rent claimed. There can be no room for reasonable controversy that the suit is in its essence a suit for recovery of a limited interest in land. In so far as that interest is concerned, the defendants to the knowledge of the plaintiff asserted a hostile title more than 12 years before the commencement of the suit. When they first encroached upon these lands, it was open to the plaintiff to assume that they had taken possession of the land in their character as his tenants. When, however, more than 12 years before the commencement of this litigation, the defendants repudiated that position, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, it was his duty to enforce his right to receive rent from the defendants by an appropriate proceeding. He has failed to do this within the period allowed by the Statute of Limitation. He has never received rent for this land, and his right to receive rent has always been repudiated by the defendant; such repudiation has lasted, to his knowledge, for more than 12 years. It is consequently clear that under Article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, the plaintiff has no enforceable title. The view we take is in accordance with that taken in the cases of Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Raja Ramranjan (1), Raktoo Singh v. Sudhram Ahir (2) and Protap Chunder v. Shukhee Soonduree Dassee (3). In these circumstances the plaintiff can derive no benefit from the principle recognised in the cases of Kingsmill v. Millard (4), Doe d Lloyd v. Jones (5), Whitmore v. Humphris (6) and Attorney General v. Tomline (7), namely, that encroachments made from the waste by a tenant, whether the land taken belongs to the landlord or to a stranger, are presumed to have been made for the benefit of his landlord, unless it appears clearly from some act done at the time that the tenant intended to make the encroachment for his own benefit and not to hold it as he held the farm to which the encroachments were adjacent: Doe d Lewis v. Rees (8), Andrews v. Hailes (9). No doubt as a general rule, the intention of the tenant to make an encroachment for his own benefit must be shown at the time when the encroachment is made, but a subsequent severance of the encroachment from the demised premises may have the same effect if brought to the knowledge of the landlord, although if the landlord is allowed to remain under the belief that the encroachment was held as part of the holding, the tenant might be estopped from denying it: Kingsmill v. Millard (4), Doe d Lloyd v. Jones (5); Nuddyarchand Shaha v. Meajan (10), Laws of England, edited by Halsbury, Volume IV, paragraph 1144.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern Second Appeal No. 929 of 1911, which also is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court ought not to have allowed the defendants to raise the contention that the 1st plaintiff has got other means of support and is, therefore, not entitled to claim maintenance at all out of her husband's joint family property. [See also 'on this point Darbha Lingayya v. Darbha Kanakamma (1).]

—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XLI, rr. 11, 12, O. XLVII, r. 4—Review—Notice to opposite party, necessity of—“Opposite party”, meaning of—Bench of High Court reviewing order of dismissal—Power of another Bench to consider propriety of order of review—Review, whether re-opens the whole case—Lessor—Sub-lessee—Sub-lease—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. XIV, ss. 161, 167—Stranger purchasing holding in execution of decree for arrears of rent—Annulment of sub-lease.

As a general rule, no order of review can be made without previous notice to the person in possession of the decree which is to be reviewed. [p. 899, col. 1.]

But an application for review of an order of dismissal under rule 11, Order XLI, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, can be granted without the issue of any notice to the respondent. [p. 899, col. 2.]

The expression “opposite party” in the proviso to rule 4, of Order XLVII may be taken to mean the party interested to support the order sought to be vacated or modified upon the application for review. [p. 899, col. 1.]

The propriety of an order granting a review of the order of dismissal of an appeal under rule 11 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, can be considered only by the Bench granting the review, and it is that Bench alone which can either maintain or vacate the original order of dismissal. [p. 899, col. 2; p. 900, col. 1.]

Whether the entire case is or is not re-opened when a review has been granted, must depend upon the circumstances of each individual case. [p. 900, col. 1.]

When an appeal is admitted under rule 12, Order XLI, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the appeal cannot be restricted to one or more grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal, the whole appeal is before the Court when the case is taken up for final disposal. [p. 900, col. 2.]

The principle that, when a person has granted a lease on the allegation that he had such interest as entitled him to create a valid lease in favour of the grantee, the doctrine of estoppel operates between the grantor and the grantee, does not apply to the case of a purchaser of a holding at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent suing to eject the defendant as a trespasser. [p. 900, col. 2; p. 901, col. 1.]

The rights of a stranger who has purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree under Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act are regulated by the provisions of that Chapter, which authorise the purchaser to annul all encumbrances—including sub-tenancies—mentioned in section 161 of the Act. He can take the requisite steps under section 167 to annul a sub-tenancy. [p. 901, col. 2; p. 902, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for possession of land upon declaration of title by purchase at an execution sale and for mesne profits. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit; upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision and has made a decree for ejectment in respect of the first seven parcels of land. On the present appeal the propriety of the decision of the District Judge has been assailed as erroneous in law. But before we deal with the questions which arise in the appeal, we have to examine two preliminary objections taken on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent.

The appeal was lodged in this Court on the 31st July 1913. On the 1st December 1913 the appeal was summarily dismissed under rule 11, Order XLI, of the Code by Carnduff and Richardson, JJ. On the 28th February

JANAKI NATH HORE T. PRABHASINI DAS.

1914, an application was made by the appellants for a review of this order. The application was heard ex parte on the 8th April 1914. The result was that the previous order of dismissal was recalled and an order was made to the following effect: "The appeal will be heard; let the record be sent for and issue the usual notices".

On behalf of the respondent, two objections have been urged against the validity of this order, namely, first, that it is inoperative because made in contravention of rule 4 of Order XLVII of the Code, which requires that no application for review shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party to enable him to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order a review of which is applied for; and, secondly, that if the order be assumed to have been properly made without notice, the appellants are restricted to the single ground upon which the application for review was based. In our opinion, there is no substance in either of these contentions. As regards the first objection, it need not be disputed, to use the language of Lord Macnaghten in the case of Mahomed Zohuruddin v. Nuruddin (1), that, as a general rule, no order of review can be made without previous notice to the person in possession of the decree which is to be reviewed. But the substantial question is, who is the "opposite party" upon whom notice of the application should have been served in this case. The expression "opposite party" is not defined in the Code, but it may be taken to mean the party interested to support the order sought to be vacated or modified upon the application for review. Now, what was the order in the present case which was sought to be recalled by the appellants and what was the order which they endeavoured to get substituted in lieu thereof. The order which they prayed might be recalled was to the effect that the appeal be summarily dismissed; and the order which they wished to have substituted in its place was that notice of the appeal be served upon the respondent and that the appeal be heard on the merits after the record had been received. Can it be contended reasonably that the respondent was the "opposite party" within the meaning of the expression in the proviso to rule 4 of Order XLVII, that he was in fact interested to appear and support the order of summary dismissal, when the only order sought to be substituted therefor was that the appeal be heard in his presence? In our opinion, the question must be answered in the negative. If we acceded to the contention of the respondent, the result would be that he would be subjected to needless harassment from which the Legislature intended to protect him by the introduction of rule 11, Order XLI of the Code. If it is obligatory upon the Court to issue notice upon the respondent when an application is made to review an order of dismissal under rule 11 of Order XLI, the respondent must appear in answer to the Rule to support the order of dismissal without the record before the Court; and if the Rule is made absolute and the appeal directed to be heard in the presence of the respondent, he would have to appear a second time to support the decree under appeal. This result could never have been intended by the Legislature. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in Joy Coomur Dutta Jha v. Eshuree Nund Dutta Jha (2), where it was ruled that an application for review of an order of dismissal under section 25 of Act XXIII of 1861, which corresponds to rule 11 of Order XLI of the present Code could be granted without the issue of any notice to the respondent. That procedure has been followed in numerous cases in this Court during the last 40 years, though we are informed that latterly in one or two solitary instances, amongst which may be mentioned Abdul Hakim v. Hem Chandra Das (3), the view has been taken that notice of the application for review should be issued upon the respondent. We are clearly of opinion that what has been the practice of the Court for a long series of years is in conformity with the law and that we should not depart from it. We may further point out that if the objection urged by the respondent were well founded, we could not give effect to it; for as was pointed out in the case of Haldhar Jha v. Syed Shah Mahammad Ashraf Alam (4) where a similar objection was unsuccessfully taken, the point must be urged before the Division Bench which granted the review; it is that Bench alone which can consider the propriety of the order previously made and either maintain or vacate the original order of dismissal. The respondent has made a faint attempt to develop an analogy between an ex parte order granting a review and an ex parte order directing that an appeal be registered though filed beyond the period of limitation or on a memorandum insufficiently stamped: on this basis, it has been argued that in the former, precisely as in the latter, class of cases the respondent is not bound by the order made in his absence and is competent to question its validity when the appeal is called on for final disposal in his presence. But, plainly, there is no real analogy between the two classes of cases. It cannot be maintained for a moment that the order in the present case was made without jurisdiction and we are not prepared to adopt the view indicated in Abdul Hakim v. Hem Chandra Das (3) that the order made without notice is a nullity. Even if the contention of the respondents that notice is essential is well founded, it shows at best that the order has been made irregularly or with material irregularity in the exercise of the jurisdiction possessed by the Judges who granted the review. That order, consequently, can neither be ignored nor vacated by us. But it is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the case in fuller detail, because in our opinion the order was properly made, though notice of the application for review was not served on the respondent.

As regards the second objection that the appeal should be restricted to the single ground which was made the basis of the application for review, we are of opinion that it is entirely unfounded. No doubt, it was ruled by this Court in Bhubaneshwari Koer v. Ajodhya Singh (5) that an application for review may be granted in part; and, as pointed out in Sheikh Sadaruddin v. Sheikh Ekramuddin (6), whether the entire case is or is not re-opened when a review has been granted, must depend upon the circumstances of each individual case. But it is plain that in this case the entire appeal is open, because, as was pointed out in Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (7), when an appeal is admitted under rule 12 of Order XLI of the Code, the appeal cannot be restricted to one or more grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal: the whole appeal is before the Court when the case is taken up for final disposal. We hold accordingly that all the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal may be considered by us.

We now turn to the merits of the appeal. The case was argued in the Courts below on the assumption that the land in dispute constituted an occupancy holding of one Arun Kanta Chandra, who granted a permanent sub-lease on the 3rd December 1899 to the first defendant. The case for the defendant is that at the time when this sub-lease was granted, he was already in occupation as a tenant and that the sub-lease did not create any new tenancy. This sub-lease contravened the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as it created a term exceeding nine years and would not have been admitted to registration if it had been stated in the document that the grantor was an occupancy raiyat. But the title of the defendant does not depend upon the sub-lease. He has been in possession from a period antecedent to the lease upon payment of rent to his grantor, and has thus acquired the status of at least an under-raiyat. The question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to eject him.

The plaintiff purchased the holding at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 21st January 1901 and instituted this suit on the 4th December 1911 to eject the defendant as a trespasser. It is plain that there is no room here for the application of the principle recognised in Manik Borai v. Bani Charan Mandal (8) and Ara' Ali v. Rachimaddi (9), namely, that when a person has granted a lease on the allegation that he had such interest as entitled him to create a valid lease in favour of the grantee, the doctrine of estoppel operates between the grantor and grantee; in other words, that it is not competent to the grantor to show that the recitals in the document as to his status are incorrect and that on the true state of facts, he had no authority to create the lease. Here the question does not arise between the grantor and the grantee, and the sub-lease is consequently liable to be attacked as void, on the principle explained in Jarip Khan v. Dorfa Bewa (10) and Telam Pramanik v. Adu Shaikh (11). The plaintiff is a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and we have to investigate his rights and privileges. In this connection, our attention has been invited to two classes of cases, where two distinct principles have been recognised. In the first class of cases, namely, in Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (12), Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (13) and Ial Ma'omed Sarkar v. Jogir Sheikh Mallik (14) the doctrine was recognised that the landlord of an occupancy raiyat, who has purchased the interest of the raiyat and is thus brought into direct contact with the under-raiyat inducted on the land by the occupancy raiyat, cannot, in view of the provisions of section 22 of the Pungal Tenancy Act, seek the benefit of sub-section (1) of section 85, which provides that if a raiyat sub-lets otherwise than by a registered lease the sub-lease shall not be valid against the landlord, unless made with the landlord's consent. In the second class of cases, namely, Peary Mohun Mookerjee v. Badul Chandra Bagdi (15), Gangadhar Mandal v. Rajendra Nath Ghosh (16) and Fakir Chandra Singha Roy v. Banamali Sain (17), the principle is enunciated that when a landlord purchases the occupancy holding at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, it is not necessary for him to annul the interest of the under-raiyat as an encumbrance, because it is an interest which is not valid against him by virtue of sub-section (1) of section 85. The case before us is not covered by either of these two principles. We have not here to deal with the case of a landlord who has purchased by private alienation or at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. We have to investigate the case of a stranger who has purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree under Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. His rights are clearly regulated by the provisions of that Chapter. Section 159 provides that where a holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect thereof, the purchaser shall take subject to the interests defined as "protected interests", but with power to annul the interests defined as "encumbrances". Section 160 defines "protected interests". Section 161 defines the term "encumbrance" to mean a lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding in limitation of his own interest therein and not being a protected interest therein as defined in section 160. The sale in this case was held under Chapter XIV, and, consequently, must be deemed to authorise the purchaser to annul all encumbrances mentioned in section 161. But the plaintiff contends that as he is a purchaser at the instance of the landlord, he is the landlord within the meaning of section 85 and that as against him the sub-tenancy of the defendants is not valid. To give effect to this contention of the respondent, it would be necessary to read into section 85 words which do not find a place there. We should have to read and construe section 85 as if it provided that sub-leases by the occupancy-raiyat shall not be valid against his landlord nor as against a person who has purchased at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent held at the instance of the landlord. The obvious answer to the contention of the respondent accordingly is that these or similar words are not in section 85. The substance of the argument is a choice between two conflicting positions. One possible view is that as the sub-tenancy is not valid against the landlord when he takes proceedings to enforce the decree for arrears of rent and brings the holding to sale, he does so on the assumption that the sub-tenancy does not exist; that is, he acts in a manner contrary to the express language of section 159. The other possible view is that the landlord acts in conformity with section 159 and that the property is sold with liberty reserved to the purchaser to annul the sub-tenancy. If the landlord himself happens to purchase, it becomes superfluous for him to proceed in the manner provided in section 167 by service of notice upon the encumbrancer, because as soon as he is brought into direct contract with the sub-tenant, he is entitled to take up the position that the sub-tenancy as against him is not valid. On the other hand, if the property passes into the hands of a stranger, he takes the requisite steps under section 167 to annul the sub-tenancy. This view does not involve any hardship upon the purchaser, nor does it tend to depreciate the value of the holding as was apprehended by the respondent. We may add that the question which now requires decision was left open for consideration in the case of Fakir Chandra Singha Roy v. Banumali Sain (17) and after full consideration of the arguments addressed to us, we are of opinion that it should be answered against the respondent.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below. The effect of our decision will be that the defendants will be tenants under the plaintiff in respect of the first seven parcels of land.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 144—Adverse possession—Pleadings—Landlord and tenant.

The plaintiff's case was that the defendant without any title unlawfully took possession of the disputed land situated within the estate of the plaintiff. The defendant alleged that more than 12 years before the commencement of the suit, in the course of Settlement proceedings, he had set up a rent-free grant and disclaimed all liability to pay rent to the plaintiff in respect of the land in dispute.

Held, that the right of the plaintiff to have rent assessed on the land had been extinguished under Article 144 of the second Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1877. [p. 903, col. 1.]

Nityanund Ghose v. Kissen Kishore, W. R. 1864, Act X, Ruling, 82, distinguished.

Appeal against the decree of that Subordinate Judge of Tippera, dated the 11th April 1911, affirming that of the Munsif of Comilla, dated the 23rd August 1910.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chukervarti and Romes Chunder Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to land and for assessment of fair rent. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendant has without any title taken possession of the disputed land which is situated within his estate, that although rent has been demanded repeatedly the defendant has not paid rent and has refused to take a settlement. The case for the defendant is that she has a rent-free title to the disputed tank and that in any event she and her predecessors have for generations held the property in adverse title, so that the claim of the plaintiff for assessment of rent is barred by limitation. The Courts below have concurrently dismissed the claim for assessment of rent.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and has contended on the authority of the decision in Nityanund Ghose v. Kissen Kishore (1) that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties and that consequently the mere assertion of a hostile title by the defendant cannot possibly be taken to have extinguished his claim for assessment of rent in respect of the disputed land. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. In the case upon which reliance is placed, it was observed that "it is a very usual thing for a man to squat on a piece of land, or to take into cultivation an unoccupied or waste piece of land. Tenancy, in a great many districts in Bengal, commences in this way and where it does so commence, it is presumed that the cultivator cultivates by the permission of the landlord, and is under obligation to his landlord to pay him a fair rent when the latter may choose to demand it. Thus the established usage of the country regards these parties as landlord and tenant, and unless the landlord chooses thus to treat him, the cultivator is not regarded, as he would be by the law as administered in England, as a trespasser, but as a tenant, and he would be so although he may never have expressly acknowledged the landlord's right or entered into an express contract with him for the payment of rent. If he chooses to cultivate the zemindar's lands and the zemindar lets him, there is an implied contract between them, creating a relationship of landlord and tenant." The principle thus laid down has no application to the circumstances of this litigation. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendant unlawfully took possession of this tank. The defendant avers that more than 12 years before the commencement of this suit, in the course of Settlement proceedings, she set up a rent-free grant and disclaimed all liability to pay rent to the plaintiff in respect of the disputed land. Notwithstanding this disclaimer of liability the plaintiff has waited for more than 12 years and now seeks a declaration that he is entitled to have rent assessed on this land. In our opinion, the right of the plaintiff to have rent assessed on the land has been extinguished under Article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act. It is not alleged by the plaintiff that there was, at any time, a relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. On the other hand, his case is that the defendant without any title unlawfully took possession of the disputed land. The Subordinate Judge has incidentally observed that on the authority of the decision mentioned, the inference may possibly be drawn that there was an agreement of tenancy between the parties. This, however, is not the case either of the plaintiff or of the defendant.

(1) W. R. 1864, Act X, Ruling 82.

SHIB SAHAI v. SARASWATI.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—"Bandhu," meaning of—Grandfather's great-grandson's daughter's son, whether a bandhu

The word "bandhu" under the Hindu Law means a "sapinda" who belongs to a different gotra, that is to say, a "bhinna gotra sapinda," [p. 904, col. 1.]

Therefore, for the bandhu-relationship to exist it is essential that the person claiming to be the bandhu and the last owner must have been sapindas of each other. The sapinda-relationship extends to seven degrees on the father's side and five degrees on the mother's side including the last owner. [p. 904, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Moradabad.

Mr. K. N. Jughale (with him Messrs. S. C. Banerji and B. E. O'Connor), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of the property of one Khairati Rai. The plaintiff claims as transferee from Bulaki, who is alleged to be the bandhu of Khairati Rai and thus to have inherited his property. According to the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff in the plaint the relationship between Bulaki and Khairati Rai is this, that Bulaki is the son of the daughter of a grandson of the paternal uncle of Khairati's father. The question, therefore, is whether the grandfather's great-grandson's daughter's son is a bandhu under the Mitakshara Law. The Court of first instance was of opinion that the plaintiff's vendor Bulaki was Khairati's bandhu "ex parte materna." The learned Subordinate Judge clearly misunderstood what was meant by a "bandhu ex parte materna." According to the Mitakshara bandhus are of three descriptions, namely, the owner's own bandhus, his father's bandhus, that is "bandhus ex parte paterna" and his mother's bandhus that is "bandhus ex parte materna." There is no question of Bulaki being a bandhu ex parte materna in this case. The question what constitutes a bandhu was fully considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Ram Chandra Martand v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (1) and the present case is practically concluded by the ruling of their Lordships. The word "bandhu" under the Hindu Law (as has been held in that case also) means a "sapinda" who belongs to a different gotra, that is to say, a "bhinna gotra sapinda." Therefore, for the bandhu relationship to exist it is essential that the person claiming to be the bandhu and the last owner must have been sapindas of each other. The rule of sapinda-relationship has been laid down in the Mitakshara and it extends to seven degrees on the father's side and five degrees on the mother's side, including the last owner. Taking the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff which will be found at page 9 of the paper-book, it is clear that Bulaki was one degree beyond the seventh degree counting from the last owner, Khairati Rai. We are asked to count the seven degrees from the great-grandfather of Khairati, who was the common ancestor and it is said that computing from the common ancestor Khairati is within the seventh degree, but this computation would leave out of consideration altogether Khairati himself and his father. The mode in which relationship should be computed is stated in Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures (1880), page 707, and that is a mode which the lower Appellate Court has adopted. We think that the decision of that Court is right. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadian Law—Acknowledgment of son—Son of another, if can be acknowledged—Acknowledgment of sonship, when amounts to acknowledgment of legitimacy.

A Muhammadan cannot legally acknowledge as his son a person who is shown to be the son of another man. [p. 904, col. 2.]

An actual declaration of acknowledgment includes only an admission of sonship yet that admission can be regarded as tantamount to an acknowledgment of legitimate sonship if there are circumstances to justify it. [p. 905, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 233 of 1909, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 135 of 1906.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by one Sardarbibi as the widow of Husseinbhai Abdullabhai to recover possession of her one-fourth share of the deceased's property. Husseinbhai died in June 1904. He left no issue, but he left a widow, the present plaintiff, and two brothers, the 1st and 2nd defendants. The 1st and 2nd defendants did not dispute the claim of the plaintiff, but the 3rd defendant resisted the plaintiff's suit and claimed to be the acknowledged son of the deceased Husseinbhai. Both the lower Courts have acceded to the 3rd defendant's contention, and the present appeal is brought, not by the plaintiff, but by the 1st and 2nd defendants who are represented before us by Mr. Rao.

The learned Pleader for the appellants has taken two points in his clients' interests. The first of those points is that a Muhammadan cannot legally acknowledge as his son a person who is shown to be the son of another man. It appears to me that this legal proposition is well grounded, and among the numerous authorities which may be cited in its favour we may mention Hamilton's Hedaya at page 439, Sir Barnes Peacock's judgment in Musammatt Jaibun v. Musammatt Bilee Nujeeboonissa (1) and the elaborate judgments in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2).

But the question is, whether in the present case the 3rd defendant is shown not to have been the son of Husseinbhai. That is a question of fact and the decision of it rests with the lower Courts. Mr. Rao, however, urges that one of the necessary facts is the recital to be found in the deed of gift by Husseinbhai to the 3rd defendant, Exhibit 142, in which occurs this passage: "the reason why these fields are given to you in gift is that your parents died leaving you only about twenty days old". It is, therefore, urged that we have no option but to infer that whosoever may have been the father of the 3rd defendant, that father could not have been the donor, Husseinbhai. We think the answer to this contention is that the admission which we have set out is only one fact among many other facts upon which the lower Courts had to determine the question whether the 3rd defendant was shown not to be the son of Husseinbhai. It cannot be said that the learned Judges below have omitted to consider the admission in the deed of gift, nor can it, we think, be said that by reason of that admission they were bound to come to the conclusion in the appellants' favour. What they have done is, we think, what they were bound to do. They have considered this admission as one piece of evidence, but on a general examination of all the evidence bearing upon this point, they have found that the 3rd defendant is not shown to have been the son of any person other than Husseinbhai. That conclusion of fact being perfectly open to the Judges below on the evidence is not, in our opinion, subject now to review in second appeal. And since that is the conclusion of fact, the position in law seems to us to be precisely that which, according to Mr. Justice Mahmood in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (2), invites the application of the Mohammadan doctrine of ikrar or acknowledgment; for, the learned Judge says at page 335 of the report: "The doctrine relates only to cases where either the fact of the marriage itself or the exact time of its occurrence with reference to the legitimacy of the acknowledged child is not proved in the sense of the law as distinguished from disproved". So here, as we understand the judgments, both Courts hold that the probability is that defendant No. 3 is the son of Husseinbhai by a union of doubtful validity.

The only other argument submitted on behalf of the appellants was based upon the Privy Council decision in Abdul Razak v. Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim (3), which followed their Lordships' decision in Ashrufood Dowlah Ahmed Hossein Khan Bahadoor v. Hyder Hossein Khan (4). The argument was that for an acknowledgment of sonship to be valid according to Muhammadan Law, it must be an acknowledgment not merely of sonship but of legitimate sonship. It is clear, however, that the decisions in the two cases which we have noticed must be read in the light of the facts which were then before the Privy Council, and in both of these cases the Court was concerned with a Muhammadan son born out of wedlock, so that it was imperative to see that the acknowledgment relied upon was not a mere acknowledgment of sonship as opposed to an acknowledgment of legitimacy. In our present case there is not any such special reason for insisting upon a clear expression of the acknowledgment of legitimacy, and though the actual declaration of acknowledgment includes only an admission of sonship, yet that admission, when read according to the circumstances of this case, must, we think, be regarded as tantamount to an acknowledgment of legitimate sonship. That is the view which both the Courts have taken upon the evidence as to the treatment which Husseinbhai gave to the third defendant, as to the conduct which each of them pursued towards each other, and as to the terms upon which they stood as disclosed in the deeds of gift. We are satisfied upon the same evidence that the acknowledgment, though in express terms only acknowledging sonship, must, in the circumstances now appearing, be taken to have amounted to an acknowledgment of legitimate sonship.

These being the only two points urged on the appellants' behalf and both of them, in our opinion, failing for the reasons stated, we confirm the lower Court's decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Letters Patent, cl. 15—Rule discharged under s. 115 of Civil Procedure Code, if appealable

Where a rule issued under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, was discharged by a Bench of the High Court in accordance with the opinion of the senior Judge, the Court being divided in its opinion on the question of its jurisdiction to interfere in revision:

Held, that the order was not appealable under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. [p. 907, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of Stephen and D. Chatterjee, JJ., dated the 29th January 1912, in Civil Rule No. 4742 of 1911, against the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi, dated the 20th May 1911, modifying that of the Munsif of Giridih, dated the 10th December 1910.

FACTS of the case appear from the following

JUDGMENT.

STEPHEN J.—This suit is brought on a promissory note executed in favour of the plaintiff by the second defendant, who was then the Dewan of the father of the first defendant. The consideration for the note was an advance of money to the second defendant to enable him to pay road-cess on behalf of the father of the first defendant. In the Munsif's Court it was held that the second defendant had an implied authority from the father of the first defendant to raise the money and that his action had been ratified by the first defendant. The suit was accordingly decreed against the first defendant. On appeal to the Judicial Commissioner, this decree was set aside, on the finding that the second defendant had no authority to borrow money on behalf of the first defendant, and that the acts necessary to constitute a ratification of the second defendant's action by the first did not occur. A Rule has been issued calling on defendant No. 1 to show cause why this order should not be set aside. The question whether defendant No. 2 had authority to bind defendant No. 1 is one which the Court had jurisdiction to decide and we cannot interfere with its decision on revision. It is argued before us, however, that the question of ratification was an issue in the case, and that the Judicial Commissioner failed to exercise his jurisdiction to decide it. The question of ratification was not expressly set out as an issue, but as it is independent of the question of the authority of the second defendant, it must be regarded as an issue by itself. The finding of the trying Court is that on demand being made of the first defendant he told the second defendant to pay the amount claimed out of his rent collections. The Appellate Court found that the question whether this occurred was immaterial, that there would have been ratification if certain circumstances had occurred which did not, in fact, occur, and that the facts found by the first Court constituted no admission that the money ordered to be paid was to come out of the pocket of the first defendant. The law laid down by the Judicial Commissioner cannot be accepted as correct, but looking at the facts of the case I cannot doubt that he had the question of ratification before his mind, and that he in fact decided it adversely to the petitioner. I am of opinion, therefore, that he has not declined jurisdiction in this matter, and that he has not acted with material irregularity within the meaning of section 115 of the Code, and consequently that this Rule should be discharged.

The Court being divided in its opinion, the opinion of the senior Judge prevails.

RAJNATH MISTRI v. RAJA JUNG BAHADUR.

The Rule is discharged. No order as to costs.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—I regret very much that I am unable to agree with my learned colleague in the view he has taken of this case.

The plaintiff expressly alleged in his plaint that the defendant No. 1 had admitted the debt after the death of his father. This was denied by the defendant No. 1. The case of the plaintiff was that even if the defendant No. 2 had no initial authority to bind the Raja, the latter had, when a demand was made of him for the debt, directed his servant, defendant No. 2, to re-pay the debt, from the collections of his estate. The learned Munsif found that this was so and that there had been a clear ratification or admission of the debt. The learned Judge thinks that this issue of ratification was immaterial and does not come to any finding upon it. The reason given is that it would have been ratification if the Raja had directed payment from his procket, but would not be ratification as the money was directed to be paid from the collections of his estate. This view of law is decidedly erroneous, but that alone would not perhaps by itself give us jurisdiction to interfere in revision. Here, however, the learned Judge has not come to a decision on the facts alleged to have occurred, and has thereby left undecided the most important issue in the case. He has, I think, by so doing, not only acted with material irregularity, but virtually refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. The decision of the Privy Council in the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Buksh Singh (1) has been relied on as negating our jurisdiction to interfere in this case. Their Lordships held in that case that a Court deciding a question of law wrongly does not exercise jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The judgment of the Judicial Committee does not furnish any test, however, for determining under what circumstances a Court may be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity. See Dwarka Nath Sen v. Kisori Lal Gosain (2). In the case of Silharathrai Soojanrai v. Anantram Baldeodas (3), the Bombay High Court (Jenkins, C. J., and Aston, J.) held that where a Court refuses to set aside an ex parte decree on an erroneous view of the law of limitation, it fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. In the case of Rudrappa v. Narasingrao (4) the same Court (Jenkins, C. J., and Batchelor, J.) held that where the only issue tried by the lower Court is not an issue upon which the dispute could be adjudicated upon, it is an exercise of jurisdiction with material irregularity. So the returning of a plaint without warrant of law has been held to be an acting illegally in the exercise of jurisdiction: Zamiran v. Fateh Ali (5).

I think these are sufficient authorities on which we can hold that the action of the Court below is within the mischief of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute and send the case back to the lower Court for a proper decision of the issue of ratification.

Against the above decision an appeal was preferred under clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

Mr. H. N. Sen and Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.

Babu Nares Chandra Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Though we have heard Mr. Sen and listened to an interesting and careful argument, we certainly do not mean to hold that he was entitled to be heard and that an appeal lies. But it is enough for us to say that notwithstanding what he urged, it is clear that there was no case for revision under section 115 of the Code.

We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Azamgarh.

Mr. Shamnath Mushran, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narmadeshwar Prasad Upadhyaya (with him Mr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal and arises out of the following circumstances. The property in dispute is an occupancy holding. The appellant Sheonandan and one other brought a suit against the plaintiff in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent. Sheonandan's case was that the holding had been mortgaged to certain mortgagees who had sub-let the land to Ram Lagan Singh, that the mortgage had been redeemed, that Ram Lagan Singh remained on as a sub-tenant and that he was liable for arrears of rent. Ram Lagan's case was that he was not a sub-tenant but that he held the land as a mortgagee in possession on an old mortgage of 1920 Sambat. The Revenue Court went into the matter, held that Ram Lagan had failed to establish any mortgage and gave Sheonandan a decree for arrears of rent. Then Sheonandan and his companion brought another suit in the Revenue Court to eject Ram Lagan Singh (and one other) as being a sub-tenant. The latter again put forward his plea that he held as a mortgagee under this old mortgage. The Revenue Court referred Ram Lagan to the Civil Court to obtain a declaration as to whether or not he held this land as a mortgagee. Thereupon Ram Lagan Singh and another plaintiff brought the present suit against Sheonandan Ahir, and claimed a declaration that the plaintiffs held the land as a mortgagee. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit. The defendant Sheonandan comes here on second appeal. Two points were pressed. The first is that the very point in dispute between the parties is res judicata by reason of the decision by the Revenue Court in the rent suit. The second point is that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the mortgage which they put forward. I do not propose to touch the question of res judicata because in my opinion it is quite clear that the plaintiffs in the present suit have failed to establish any mortgage whatsoever in their favour. The mortgage-deed set up by them is dated 1920 Sambat corresponding to February 1864. The document is unregistered. It is in the handwriting completely from beginning to end of one person. It purports to be in the handwriting of Gajadhar Das. The names of the executants and the names of the witnesses purport to have been written upon the document by the hand of Gajadhar Das. No portion of the document purports to have been written by the mortgagors. The alleged executants and the alleged attesting witnesses and the scribe are all said to have died. The plaintiffs produced the son of the scribe to testify to the fact that the whole of the document is in the handwriting of his father. There is not a scrap of evidence to prove that Gajadhar Das had any authority from the alleged mortgagors or the alleged attesting witnesses to sign their names upon the document. The lower Appellate Court in the course of its judgment remarks as follows: "The scribe has signed for all the executants. It, therefore, appears that he was authorized by them to do so and the plaintiffs have proved the handwriting of the man who signed for the executants." It is a mere assumption on the part of the lower Appellate Court that the scribe appears to have been authorized by the alleged mortgagors to sign their names. The lower Appellate Court also purported to apply section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act and to presume the document to be genuine. Under section 90 a Court may presume that the signature and every other part of a document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person is in that person's handwriting and in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested. The present document does not purport to be executed by the mortgagors at all. It purports to have been executed by Gajadhar Das for the mortgagors. Section 90 does not allow a Court to presume that Gajadhar Das had any authority from the mortgagors to sign their names upon this document. The respondents' case is somewhat peculiar. If this mortgage-deed be a true one, then they and their predecessor-in-title must have held possession for at least fifty-two years and one would have thought that it would be easy to prove their possession by means of the Government record. But apparently they have been unable to prove possession for anything more than fourteen or fifteen years, and that only by the admission of the opposite party. The lower Appellate Court in its judgment says:—"It has been produced from proper custody and as I shall show later on, the plaintiffs-mortgagees have been in possession in accordance with this deed." Later on what the lower Appellate Court says about the plaintiffs' possession is as follows: "The possession of the plaintiffs for at least fourteen or fifteen years has been admitted by the defendants. The oral evidence coupled with the mortgage-deed shows that the plaintiffs have been in possession as mortgagees." It is impossible to hold that the plaintiffs-respondents held possession as mortgagees, unless and until it could be established that a mortgage was ever created. The document under which the plaintiffs claim as mortgagees no doubt exists and purports to have been written and the names of the executants to have been signed thereon by one Gajadhar. No authority from the mortgagors in favour of Gajadhar has been proved. Therefore it is impossible to say that this mortgage-deed was executed by or with the consent of the alleged mortgagors. The mortgage not having been established it is impossible to give to the plaintiffs a decree declaring that they hold the land as mortgagees. In my opinion the decision of the Court of first instance was quite correct. I allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

[p. 910, col. 1.]

Mr. P. D. Bhide, for the Respondents
Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant here was the 1st defendant in the suit, and the suit was brought by the plaintiffs for possession of a house. The plaintiffs claimed as legatees or reversioners either of one Tribhowandas or of Tribhowandas' posthumous son, who survived Tribhowandas for a period of three years. Four years after Tribhowandas' death his widow, who was the 2nd defendant, mortgaged the house in suit to present appellant who was her own brother.

The only questions with which we are concerned in this appeal are, whether the mortgage by the widow was without necessity and whether the plaintiffs' suit is out of time. On the first point the finding of the lower Courts that the mortgage was without necessity is conclusive as being a finding of fact, and though we have allowed Mr. Koyajee, for the appellant, to point out to us some alleged slips in the judgment of the lower Court upon this question, we are clearly of opinion, without examining whether the alleged slips or mistakes are really mistakes, that there is ample and convincing evidence for the lower Courts' finding on this point.

As to the question of limitation, the argument for the appellant is that the suit is governed by Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act, which prescribes for the institution of the suit a period of three years from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have an instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. The contention is that though in form the present suit is a suit for possession, yet it must be regarded as essentially a suit to set aside the widow's mortgage, because until that mortgage is set aside, the plaintiffs cannot obtain possession of the property. As to this point the authorities, we think, are in accord, and are to the effect that where the deed or instrument which seems to stand between a plaintiff and the realization of his claim in the suit is an actual nullity, the plaintiff is entitled to bring his suit for possession within twelve years, and is not hindered by the narrower period laid down by Article 91, and that, if one may say so, seems to be good sense. For the only object of Article 91 is to compel a plaintiff to remove out of his way some real existing obstacles; but where there is no real obstacle, the Article has no scope for operation. Now here it is found, in the words of the learned District Judge, that "the story of the equitable mortgage is absolutely false", or in the still plainer language of the trial Judge, "the deed passed by the widow to her brother was never intended to operate as a real mortgage transaction." What we have, therefore, is not a mortgage or any real thing whatsoever, but a mere sham or nothing, which the plaintiff was under no obligation to sue to remove.

There are many decisions which seem to us to bear out this construction of Article 91, but it will be sufficient for our present purpose to refer to what was said by the Privy Council in T. F. Petherpermal Chetty v. R. Muniandy Servai (1), where Lord Atkinson observed:—

"As to the point raised on the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, their Lordships are of opinion that the conveyance of the 11th June 1895, being an inoperative instrument, as in effect it has been found to be, does not bar the plaintiff's right to recover possession of his land, and that it is unnecessary for him to have it set aside as a preliminary to his obtaining the relief he claims."

So here, the apparent obstacle created by the mortgage is now ascertained to be no obstacle or real thing at all. Therefore, there was never anything which it could have been the plaintiff's duty to remove from his path before he could claim possession.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Bengal Land Revenue Assessment (Resumed Lands) Regulation (II of 1919)—Bengal Land Revenue Resumption Act (VII of 1862)—Decree ordering liability to rent, effect of.

The plaintiff sued the defendants for ejectment as mere trespassers. The suit was dismissed as barred by time. In appeal it was contended that a previous decree in what was called a resumption suit established the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and hence the suit was within time.

Held, that the decree could not be accepted as establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant, inasmuch as the resumption suit was one instituted under Regulation II of 1919, and subsequently transferred to the Civil Court under Bengal Act VII of 1862, and it was at least as reasonable to regard it as a suit dealing with revenue as a suit dealing with rent and, moreover, it was the predecessor of the defendant that was a party to that suit. [p. 911, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit whereby the plaintiff seeks against two defendants khas possession, with an alternative prayer that if the Court should think that defendant No. 1 could not be ejected from the land, then the plaintiff might be declared entitled to rent from him. These prayers are based upon allegations in the plaint, which set up a title in the plaintiff and proceed to state that defendant No. 1 has legally no right to hold and retain possession of the land and that both the defendants are mere trespassers. Both the lower Courts have decided against the plaintiff, holding that the suit is barred by limitation. In my opinion, that decision is correct. It, in effect, is in accordance with our determination in the previous appeals. But it is contended that there is a distinction in this case, which arises out of a decree in what has been termed a resumption suit. The argument is that this decree established the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and both the defendants. The decree is translated and we have also had the advantage of having the original vernacular decree brought to our notice. I agree with the lower Court that the decree cannot be accepted as establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant. The suit was one instituted under Regulation II of 1819 and subsequently transferred to the Civil Court under Bengal Act VII of 1862; and it is at least as reasonable to regard it as a suit dealing with revenue as a suit dealing with rent. Moreover, it was the predecessor of defendant No. 2 that was a party to that suit, and defendant No. 2 is now treated as a trespasser. I, therefore, hold that the suit must fail and would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

In 1896 a zemindar executed a usufructuary mortgage of a portion of his zemindari including sir. In 1907 the zemindari was sold at auction. The auction purchaser got the zemindar ejected from his ex-proprietary right and then brought another suit to eject the mortgagee:

Held, that the mortgagee could not be ejected, inasmuch as the mortgage having been made prior to the passing of Act II of 1901, the zemindar had not become an ex-proprietary tenant by virtue of his mortgage. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Meerut.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the year 1896 one Kure was the proprietor of a certain share in Mauza Lohari, Pargana Kutana. Out of that share he mortgaged a portion consisting of a little over a bigha to the appellants. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage and Kure put the appellants in possession of the plots now in dispute. In the year 1907 a portion of Kure's property covering an area of eight bighas eleven biswas was put up to auction in execution of a Civil Court decree and sold. The purchasers at auction were the respondents in the present case. The purchasers went to the Revenue Court and got mutation of names in their favour. They further had a rent of Rs. 44-14-2 fixed on the ex-proprietary holding of Kure. In the year 1912 the auction-purchasers proceeded further and obtained the ejectment of Kure from his entire ex-proprietary holding. Having done this, they next proceeded to sue for the ejectment of the present appellants, Bhagwana and Dewana, from the two plots Nos. 2570 and 2571. These two plots are included in the area of eight bighas eleven biswas from which Kure had been ejected.

The appellants in their written statement raised the point that they were mortgagees co-sharers and were in possession as such and that the plots in dispute were their khudkasht. The Court of first instance accepted this plea and dismissed the suit. Thereupon the respondents, Bhagwan Das and others, appealed. The lower Appellate Court held that the question for determination in the appeal was whether the respondents to this appeal were entitled to have the appellants ejected. The lower Appellate Court, holding that when Kure was ejected from the plots the appellants were merely trespassers, went on to hold that the plaintiffs were clearly entitled to have the defendants ejected. It accordingly allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs' suit with full costs throughout. Two pleas were taken in the memorandum of appeal which the defendants have filed in this Court. Great stress is laid upon the first plea, viz., that the plaintiffs, here respondents, were not competent to eject the defendants, here appellants, in enforcement of the decree against Kure. I think no doubt can exist upon this point. Indeed it is admitted by the other side that when the mortgage in 1896 was first entered into between the parties, Kure was then zemindar and he did execute a usufructuary mortgage over the two numbers in suit and put the mortgagees in possession. In 1896 and the year following this Court held that a zemindar who makes a usufructuary mortgage of his zemindari including his sir land does not so lose or part with his proprietary rights "within the meaning of section 7 of Act XII of 1881 as to become an ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land." This was held in the case of Madho Bharthi v. Barti Singh (1) by all the Judges of this Court sitting in Full Bench. From 1896 onward then Kure continued to be the proprietor over the land in dispute and was not an ex-proprietary tenant only. In the year 1901, the N.-W. P. Tenancy Act was passed and that Act (section 10, clause 12) has enacted that a usufructuary mortgage shall be deemed to be a transfer within the meaning of that section. Whatever effect that may have had upon the position of Kure it is not necessary to determine, but the passing of that Act could not affect the right which had been created in favour of the appellants prior to the passing of that Act. Section 6 of the Local General Clauses Act, clause (c), expressly lays down that where an Act of the United Provinces Legislature repeals any enactment hitherto made or hereafter to be made, then, unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed. No such intention has been pointed out to me nor do I know of any. On behalf, however, of the respondents my attention has been called to the case of Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (2). In that case it was undoubtedly held that a zemindar having mortgaged by way of usufructuary mortgage his zemindari together with his sir land lost his zemindari rights and became an ex-proprietary tenant of his sir. There is one difference between that case and the present. In Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (2) the mortgagor parted with the whole of his rights in the property held by him and it was in pursuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale, sold that property in execution of the decree and purchased it and obtained possession. I do not think that that case is a safe precedent to follow in the present case and even if it applies, then the only difference is that the mortgagee rights of the appellants must be held to attach to the ex-proprietary rights which Kure held when the sale took place. The learned Judge of the Court below and the Vakil of the respondents lay some stress upon the fact that the sale of the ex-proprietary rights was not subject to any incumbrance in favour of one Sumrat, but the present appellants were no parties to that decree and it does not appear that they were ever sent for and asked as to how the property should be sold.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance.

Appeal allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Agreement with licensee to share profits—Agreement not allowed by terms of license—Agreement, if void.

As there is nothing in the Forest Act which makes it obligatory upon a licensee from a Forest Officer to observe the conditions of his license, an agreement to share profits with the licensee is not void.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Khandesh, in Appeal No. 315 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Shirpur, in Civil Suit No. 640 of 1912.

Mr. Pendse (with him Mr. H. G. Kulkarni), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues the defendant to have it declared that he is entitled to recover half the share in the profit and loss made by the defendant in the grass contract for nine forest coups, and to recover the sum falling to his share as damages and costs. The defendant denied the alleged partnership in the terms set up in the plaint, and contended that the suit was bad as being based on an agreement, if there was such an agreement, which was void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the agreement was not unlawful under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act. Therefore, he directed that a preliminary decree should be drawn up on that issue.

The learned District Judge reversed the preliminary decree and remanded the case to the lower Court. The appellant has appealed to this Court on the ground that the lower Court erred in holding that the agreement of partnership was unlawful. But notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal, it appears that the suit has been tried in the first Court on the basis of the judgment of the District Court being correct. That, however, need not prevent us from disposing of this appeal. We are of opinion that the judgment of the District Court is not correct. The section of the Indian Contract Act which is relied upon is section 23, which says: "The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law;" and it is contended, because the license given by the Forest Officer prohibits the assignment of a share or interest in the license, therefore, this agreement to pay half the profits to the plaintiff falls within the words of section 23 above referred to. We have examined the Forest Act, and we have heard all that can be said by the Pleader for the respondent in support of the judgment of the Court below. We are unable to find any provision of Statute Law which makes it obligatory upon the parties to observe the conditions of the license. Of course, the license can be revoked by the Forest Officer if the licensee disregards the terms of it. It does not follow from that, that an agreement to share profits which would contravene the terms of the license as between the Forest Officer and the licensee, is forbidden by law, or would defeat the provisions of any law. The learned District Judge has relied upon the case of Raghunath Lalman v. Nathu Hirji Bhate (1), which, however, is distinguishable. That was a case under the Opium Act under which the sale of opium was only permitted subject to such conditions as the Commissioner might, from time to time, prescribe. Therefore, the sale of opium by partners who could not enter into partnership without contravening the conditions prescribed would violate the provisions of the Opium Act.

We set aside the decree of the District Judge upon the preliminary issue, and direct the Judge of the lower Court to dispose of the case on the merits. The respondent must pay the costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court upon the preliminary issue.

Decree set aside.

Where the defendant has been in possession on his own behalf far beyond the statutory period and during all this time there has been no payment of rent by him and no receipt of rent by the plaintiff in respect of the land in suit, there are the elements that are required for a plea in bar by reason of adverse possession. [p. 914, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Tipperah, dated the 23rd February, 1910, modifying that of the first Munsif, Comilla, dated the 2nd March 1909.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti, Gobinda Chunder Dey Roy, Romes Chunder Sen and Birendra Chunder Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In these two appeals, the right of the Maharaja has been affirmed by the lower Appellate Court, and it has been held that he is entitled to have the lands in suit assessed with the rental of Rs. 2 per kani and also to get mesne profits. From the decrees of the lower Appellate Court, the defendants have come to this Court by way of second appeal. Here, as in other cases, much of the difficulty experienced has been created by the disregard of the essential allegations in the pleadings. The plaint here alleged wrongful dispossession and claimed by reason thereof khas possession or, in the alternative, rent as is permitted by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The defence was nishkar right, limitation and in one case work done of a substantial character. The lower Appellate Court has come to findings which it is difficult to follow, because it declares the existence of a tenancy and at the same time directs that mesne profits be paid. Mr. Sinha has admitted that this is erroneous, and I feel that perhaps, the real points at issue were not clearly placed before the Court and hence there has been some confusion of ideas. Now, there can be no doubt that there was long possession by each defendant on his own behalf far beyond the statutory period and that, during this period, there has been no payment of rent by the defendants and no receipt of rent by the plaintiff in respect of the lands in suit, and thus there are the elements that are required for a plea in bar by reason of adverse possession. To escape from this predicament the plaintiff, contrary to the allegations in his own plaint, suggests that the defendants were his tenants and in support of that, relies on what is called an admission contained in paragraph 6 of the written statement. That paragraph has been read to us more than once and it is clear that it is not an admission, but is merely a suggested explanation of how the present position of affairs might have come about.

It was an essential part of that suggestion that there was a custom of the character there described, but that custom has not been found to be established. And though at one time the learned Counsel for the plaintiff did state before us that the Maharaja had not denied the custom, when it was put to him whether he admitted the custom, he declined to do so, and for very good reason. In the circumstances, it cannot be fairly suggested that what is stated in paragraph 6 of the written statement, amounts to an admission. Then again, there is the further finding of the lower Appellate Court that there has been an encroachment on adjoining lands and thus those adjoining lands which are the subject-matter of this suit have become the subject of the original tenancy. Mr. Sinha has very frankly admitted that if they thus became part of the tenancy, the suit as at present framed must fail as being one inappropriate for the purpose of raising and procuring a decision of the question, whether or not there should be an enhancement in respect of this particular holding which has been enlarged by the encroachment. The result then is this:—The facts apart from this theory of encroachment do not show there ever was the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendants, and so there is nothing in the way of the application of the plea of limitation. If the plea of limitation be applied then the suit fails. If, on the other hand, it be said that this finding of encroachment is conclusive then the suit is misconceived. Whichever view then is taken the suit fails. We, therefore, must reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts in each case.

Messrs. G. S. Rao, N. K. Mehta and H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. M. Samarth, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only questions with which we have to deal in this judgment arise upon the construction of the Will of Mathuradas made in the year 1873, for the later Will upon which the respondent also relied as showing that Gangabai had an absolute interest in the property in suit, has been held in litigation between the plaintiff and Ganga not to be proved.

By the first clause of the Will of 1873 the testator stated that his son Girdhar's conduct not being good he gave him no authority in that Will and made no provision for him. We entertain no doubt that the testator excluded Girdharlal by these words from participation in the property dealt with by the Will, which, upon the contentions of the parties, must be taken to be the self-acquisition of Mathuradas.

The property is then described. It consisted of one house and the middle and third story of another house in Ahmedabad sufficiently capable of identification by the descriptions given. The other immoveable property was one field in Shahawadi, Taluka Daskroi, in Ahmedabad District bearing Survey No. 123.

The moveable property is not capable of identification at the present time.

It is contended for the plaintiff that as the Will speaks, from the testator's death it must be taken to dispose of all the property in his ownership at that date. We think we should apply the rule of construction approved by Lord Justice Davey in In re Seal, Seal v. Taylor (1), that "where there is property in respect of which all the facts of the description are found to be true, so that the property exactly fits the description, the whole of that property, and nothing more passes." Under that rule no immoveable property would pass but such as answered to the description and was of the testator's ownership at his death. That this was the testator's intention is confirmed by the passage referring to the "above-mentioned" moveable and immoveable properties.

The property is disposed of after the testator's death in the following words: "If I die then my son's wife Bai Ganga is the owner of the above-mentioned immoveable and moveable properties...The said Ganga shall during her life-time spend and use and enjoy out of my property and as to whatever property may have remained over after her decease her two daughters are the owners thereof." At the date of the Will the testator had two granddaughters by Ganga one of whom predeceased him but before his death another was born and survived him. He, therefore, left two granddaughters by Ganga.

The first question arising in this part of the Will is whether Ganga took an absolute or some less interest and the second, if she did not take absolutely, whether of her two surviving daughters one or both took vested remainders.

On the first point we think the widow took for life with a power of disposal in her life-time as in In re Punder, Williams v. Pounder (2). In that case a testator by his Will gave his residue to his wife absolutely. By a codicil he revoked this gift and after making a specific gift gave his residue to his wife "for her own absolute use and benefit and disposal", but without prejudice to the absolute power of disposal by his wife of all the said residue in case after her decease any part thereof should "remain undisposed of" by her, he gave the same to two other persons equally as tenants-in-common. It was held that the wife took a life-interest with a power of disposition by act inter vivos but not by Will.

The same conclusion follows where the gift over in remainder follows a gift for the widow's sole and separate use and benefit in the same testamentary document, as in Constable v. Bull (3).

The second question is whether Chanchal, the only one of the two daughters of Ganga living in 1873, the date of the Will, who survived the testator, took a vested remainder in the whole residue on the death of Ganga. Of the English authorities cited, viz., In re Emery, Jones v. Emery (4), Garvey v. Hibbert (5), Daniell v. Daniell (6) and Spencer v. Ward (7), In re Emery, Jones v. Emery (4) alone is in point, for here there was no mistake as to the number of grandchildren at the date of the Will and the testator must be taken to have intended to benefit only those known to him: see also Sherer v. Bishop (8). Chanchal, therefore, the survivor of those named in the Will, took a vested interest in the whole residue which was both heritable and transferable. In this case the plaintiff as her transferee takes the whole.

The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to the immoveable property of the testator specified in the Will of 1873 which was of his ownership at the time of his death.

This does not dispose of the whole property left by Mathuradas. There was other property which descended to Girdharlal by inheritance sufficient to feed the defendant's claim under the adoption by Ganga.

As the plaintiff succeeds upon the amended plaint and the new point set out therein, by virtue of an interest of Chanchal having come to him by assignment subsequent to the plaint, it is clear that he could not have succeeded if he had not taken an assignment. We, therefore, think that he ought to bear all the costs of the respondents throughout.

The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of a large estate, that the defendant, a tenant of some land within the estate, had taken possession of the land in suit without any right. The plaintiff prayed for a decree for rent. The defendant asserted that he and his predecessors had held the land adversely to the knowledge of the plaintiff for more than 50 years. The Court found that the suit land was situated within the ambit of the mal land of the estate of the plaintiff, but that the defendant had been in adverse possession of it for more than 12 years. The decree directed that the suit be decreed in part and that the plaintiff's alleged title to the property in dispute be hereby declared and that his claim for assessment of rent and for wasilat do stand dismissed.

Held, that the decree was self-contradictory, that the Court did not and never intended to find anything to the effect that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, that in face of the pleadings of the parties there was no room for any possible finding to that effect. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit which has been described as one for rent. The plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of a large estate, that the defendant is a tenant of some land within his estate, that he has taken advantage of his position as such tenant to take possession of the land in suit without any right and without settlement of rent and that the plaintiff was first apprised of this circumstance in 1898 when, in the course of Settlement proceedings, the defendant asserted that he was entitled to occupy this land without payment of rent to the proprietor. The plaintiff, therefore, prays for a decree for rent for three years at a rate described by him as fair and reasonable rate. The defendant resists the claim on the ground that he and his predecessors have held the land adversely to the knowledge of the plaintiff for 50 or 60 years and that the land is rent free. The Court of first instance found that the land was situated within the ambit of the mal land of the estate of the plaintiff. But the Court also found that the defendant had failed to prove the alleged rent-free grant in his favour by the plaintiff or his predecessors. As regards the assertion of hostile title by the defendant, the Court came to the conclusion that for more than 12 years prior to the commencement of the suit, the defendant had asserted to the knowledge of the plaintiff that he was entitled to occupy this land without payment of rent. The Court then proceeded to make a decree in these terms: "that the suit be decreed in part and that the plaintiff's alleged title to the properties in dispute be hereby declared and that his claim for assessment of rent and for wasilat do stand dismissed."

This decree, it will be observed, is self-contradictory. If the title of the plaintiff as landlord is declared, it cannot very well be held that what is described as the claim for assessment of rent and for mesne profits fails on the ground of adverse possession. The defendant, however, was satisfied with this decree; it did not hurt him in any way, as the plaintiff had according to the Court failed to establish his claim to make the defendant liable for payment of rent. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the claim for assessment of rent was barred by limitation because the defendant had, more than 12 years prior to the commencement of the suit denied the title of the plaintiff to his knowledge to have rent assessed on this land.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and has argued that as the Court of first instance decreed the suit in part and declared his alleged title to the properties in dispute, the inference follows that the relationship of landlord and tenant must be deemed to have existed between him and the defendant and that consequently the defendant could not, during the continuance of the tenancy, set up any hostile title. In our opinion this contention is fallacious. The judgment of the Court of first instance shows that all that the Court intended to declare was that the land in dispute was situated within the ambit of the mal land of the zeminlari. If that had been explicitly stated in the decree there could have been no room for misapprehension. The ambiguous language used in the decree has been made the foundation for the argument that the Court intended to find, and did as a matter of fact find, that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. The Court did not and never intended to find anything to that effect. The plaintiff, indeed, came into Court on the allegation of trespass; his case was that the defendant had taken possession of the disputed land without any right. The plaintiff has never treated the defendant as his tenant and has never realised rent from him. The defendant did not plead that he held the land as a tenant under the plaintiff. His case throughout has been that he and his predecessors held the land in adverse right to the knowledge of the plaintiff for much longer than the statutory period. Under these circumstances there was no room for any possible finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. We, therefore, do not feel embarrassed by the declaration given by the Court of first instance to the plaintiff.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Partition—Property; what, to be partitioned—Share of member already separated, if to be accounted.

A joint Hindu family consisted of three branches. A member of one branch separated having taken his share, which was $\frac{1}{12}$ th of the property, the others remaining joint. Later on the family separated. The question arose whether the branch from which a member had already separated was entitled to a full $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share or $\frac{1}{3}$ rd minus $\frac{1}{12}$ th.

Held, that under the Hindu Law the partition should be made rebus sic stantibus as on the date of suit and consequently the branch was entitled to a full $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share. [p. 920, col. 2; p. 924, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is an appeal brought from a preliminary decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge of Surat in a suit for partition. The appeal is brought by the defendants Nos. 6 to 11 and 13 who are represented before us by Diwan Bahadur G. S. Rao.

The genealogical tree of the parties, which is requisite to an understanding of the points involved, is set out at the beginning of the judgment of the lower Court and need not now be repeated. The main argument on behalf of the appellants has been that the plaintiff's share in the family property should be only $\frac{1}{4}$ th and not $\frac{1}{3}$ rd as the learned Judge below has decided. As there are now existing only three branches descended from the original ancestor,

PRANJIVANDAS SHIVLAL v. ICHHARAM VIJBHUKHANDAS.

Sambhulal, it is clear, and is admitted, that if partition is to be made having regard only to the present state of the family, the plaintiff is entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd. But, says Mr. Rao, his claim is reduced to $\frac{1}{4}$ th owing to the circumstance that in 1892 his brother Magan separated from the family and took away with him a $\frac{1}{12}$ th share of the family property. The whole question really involved in this argument is, whether partition is now to be enforced in accordance with the existing condition of the family or whether, in enforcing partition now, regard is to be had to an allowance made for a share withdrawn by one member of the plaintiffs' branch of the family, Magan, when he seceded from the co-parcenary in 1892. Mr. Rao contends that allowance must be made for Magan's withdrawal of the $\frac{1}{12}$ th share, and the argument is that partition is primarily per stirpes and is per capita only among the members of any particular branch, and, therefore, that in allotting now its appropriate share to any one branch the Court should reckon with any portion of the joint property which has already fallen to the share of that branch. In the particular case before us the argument works out in this way, that since the plaintiffs' branch in the person of Magan has already received $\frac{1}{12}$ th of the property, the present 12 shares must be distributed among the three branches with due regard to the $\frac{1}{12}$ th already acquired by the plaintiffs' branch, that is to say, since $\frac{1}{12}$ th has already gone to the plaintiff's branch plaintiff is now entitled not to the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd which he would ordinarily receive, but to the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd minus the $\frac{1}{12}$ th, in other words, $\frac{1}{4}$ th. In support of this argument reliance is placed upon the decision in Manjanatha v. Narayana (1). That case was quoted before the learned Judge below, but he avoided its authority, first, because he regarded it as distinguishable on its facts from our present case, and, secondly, because he was of opinion that in Wasantrao v. Anand-rao (2) a Bench of this Court had adopted the contrary opinion. It seems to me, however, clear that Wasantrao's case (2) has no bearing upon the present question. For, first, the point now before us was never suggested in Wasantrao's case (2), nor was it considered by the Court, and, secondly, the decision of this Court rested on the ratio that Madhav who had released his share must be regarded as having died, so that his share lapsed to the family. Wasantrao's case (2), therefore, being laid out of consideration as of no relevance to our present facts, we are left with Manjanatha v. Narayana (1) as the only direct authority. I am unable to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this case can be fairly distinguished from the case now before us. On the contrary, it seems to me that the facts in the Madras case were essentially the same as those with which we have to deal, and if the Madras decision is accepted as good Hindu Law applicable also to this Presidency, then I have no doubt that the appellants ought to succeed on this point.

The genealogy of the parties and their relative position in the Madras case are set out in the judgment of the lower Court and may also be gathered from the report in the Madras series. I will not, therefore, encumber this judgment by repeating them. It is enough to say that at a partition made in 1867, 7 $\frac{1}{12}$ th shares were allotted to various members of the family and there were left 5 $\frac{1}{12}$ th shares in the possession of Ramkrishna, Manjanatha and Narayan II. Ramkrishna having died, Manjanatha brought a suit for partition. It was held by the Madras High Court that he was entitled to three of the 5 $\frac{1}{12}$ th shares left and that Narayana II was entitled only to the remaining two shares. That decision was arrived at, as I understand the judgment, because the learned Judges held (1) that in 1867 there was no disruption of the joint family, but only a separation by certain members, the others continuing joint after as before this event; (2) that the rule directing division primarily per stirpes and secondly per capita inside each branch applies only where all the co-parceners desire partition at one and the same time; and (3) that since the two brothers of Manjanatha had in 1867 taken together 3 $\frac{1}{12}$ th shares, each taking $\frac{1}{2}$ such shares, therefore, the plaintiff, Manjanatha should get three shares, $1\frac{1}{2}$ in his own right and $1\frac{1}{2}$ as representing his deceased father, so that Narayan II could only get two of these $\frac{1}{12}$ th shares. Narayan II, it should be said, had contended that the distribution should be equal as things stood at the date of suit, so that the plaintiff, Manjanatha, should receive $2\frac{1}{2}$ shares out of the five. But this contention was disallowed, because, as I have explained, the learned Judges decided that regard must be had to the share which had already gone to the plaintiff Manjanatha's branch. Now if we apply this reasoning to the facts before us, we start with this: that in 1892 the present plaintiff's branch in the person of Magan received a $\frac{1}{12}$ th share. That must remain to the debit of the plaintiff's branch, and consequently the plaintiff's present claim cannot exceed the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd to which he would ordinarily be entitled minus the $\frac{1}{12}$ th which his branch had already taken. In other words, upon the reasoning adopted in the Madras judgment the appellants are right in saying that the plaintiff's present claim cannot exceed a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share. The learned Subordinate Judge, I think, was mistaken in supposing that the Madras judgment was based on the view that in 1867 there had been an actual or general division among Manjanatha's ancestors. On the contrary, the Court held that the members, who did not separate from the co-parceners in 1867, continued throughout to form a joint family. That is identically the case here where both parties agree, and where the learned Judge below has found, as a fact, that when Magan separated in 1892, the other members did not divide but continued as a joint family both before and after 1892. In view of the Privy Council's judgment in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (3) it is clear that this is the position which must be accepted for the determination of our present case. I must not be taken as suggesting that the decision of this appeal would be different even if the other members had to be regarded as reunited co-parceners after 1892. I mention that their status continued joint only in order to show that in this respect also the facts in the Madras case were the same as those now before us.

(2) 6 Bom. L. R. 925.

The simple question, therefore, is, whether we should follow the decision in Manjanatha's case (1). It is not binding on us, but it is deserving of all respect both on account of the learned Judges who delivered that judgment and on account of one's natural anxiety to avoid, if possible, any difference of judicial opinion on a question of law affecting rights of property. But with every wish to follow the view which commended itself to the learned Judges in Madras I find myself compelled to prefer the other opinion.

In explaining the grounds upon which my view is based, I desire to say, first, that so far as concerns this Presidency the Madras rule is to be supported only on the grounds of apparent arithmetical equality and depends on no text or specific principle of Hindu Law. For the Hindu text which the learned Judges in Madras called in aid of their decision was from the Smriti Chandrika, a work of no direct authority in this Presidency; whereas the work which is of authority in this case from Gujarat, viz., the Vyavahara Mayukha, lays down exactly the contrary rule to that which has been prescribed in the Smriti Chandrika. For the rule of the Mayukha is that in a partition between reunited co-parceners the shares are equal, notwithstanding that the portions brought in on reunion are unequal: see West and Buhler, pages 783 and 784. As I have already said, the parties here are not to be regarded as reunited co-parceners, but in so far as any analogy is to be drawn from the position which reunited co-parceners would occupy in a similar state of facts, that analogy is clearly adverse to the appellants.

Next, I venture to doubt whether the apparent arithmetical equality secured by the Madras rule is a sufficient ground for the promulgation of such a general principle. For though in one view the rule would work equitably, and did work equitably, in the particular facts of the Madras case, it is not difficult to imagine circumstances in which its working would be inequitable, as for instance, where after the first separation the members of the family who remained joint largely increased the wealth of the family by their own industry. I think, therefore, that such a rule as I am considering is hardly an adequate reason to depart from the ordinary rule that partition should be made rebus sic stantibus as on the date of suit. There is no direct authority for this opinion in the Bombay reports, but in a somewhat similar case expression was given to a similar principle in Konerrav v. Gurrav (4). Further, in my opinion, the peculiar legal system of the joint Hindu family should not be invaded or disturbed by unauthorized rules in pursuit of a doubtful equality. It must be remembered that in all such cases where one member separates and the others continue joint, those who continue joint do so at their own risk. Their position may improve or may suffer owing to any one of many chances, and the check on fortune introduced by the adoption of the Madras rule seems to me insignificant when compared with the risks and chances which must inevitably be accepted by those who elect to remain joint. And in this context I would observe that it seems to me a mistake to suppose that financial considerations are anything but a subsidiary point in the preservation of the Hindu system of the joint family. If all the members of a Hindu joint family were bent solely or principally each on his own financial betterment, the system could not, I suppose, survive very long. For these reasons I think that there is no general principle or consideration which can be appealed to in support of the rule adopted in Madras; and with unaffected respect I cannot but think that that rule cannot be reconciled with the legal principle which underlies the joint family system. That principle was stated in language now become familiar by the Privy Council in the judgment in Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (5) in the following words:—"According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu Law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property that he, that particular member, has a certain definite share." But the reasoning in the Madras case seems to me to proceed, and necessarily to proceed, upon the footing that the shares mentally ascertained at the first separation have ever since remained fixed and definite so that throughout the intervening years before the institution of the suit for partition it can be predicated of each member of the joint family that he owned such and such a definite, share of the joint family property. That, I respectfully think, is not in accordance with the

(3) 5 Bom. L. R. 469; 30 C. 725 (P. C.); 7 C. W. N. 642; 30 I. A. 130.

PRANJIVANDAS SHIVLAL v. IOHHARAM VIJBHUKHANDAS.

(4) 5 B. 589.

(5) 11 M. I. A. 75 at p. 89; 8 W. R. 1 (P. C.); 1 Suth. P. C. J. 657; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 218; 20 F. R. 30.

principle which rather invites the inference that when once the separating member retires with his share, the retirement becomes an accomplished fact whose influence is spent at the time so that the joint members and their fortunes are no longer to be influenced by the incident. As I have indicated, that would be the case under the law prevailing in this Presidency if the family had separated and reunited in 1892, and the case in favour of equal shares at the time of suit appears to me to be still stronger where there has never been any general partition of the family but all except the seceding member have continued joint. On this ground I am of opinion with very great respect that we ought not to give effect to the decision in Manjanat-a's case (1), and that the appellants, who upon this point rely wholly upon that decision, ought not to succeed.

HAYWARD, J.—The plaintiff representing one branch, viz., Tribhovan's branch, saed defendants representing two other branches, viz., Lalbhai's and Shivilal's branches, to obt in 1/3rd share in the family estate by partition. The defendants pleaded as to the share claimed (1) an ancestor's Will limiting the share to Rs. 25,000 alleged to have already been paid, (2) a previous partition limiting the share to what it would have been at the withdrawal of Lalbhai, the sole representative of another branch, and (3) a previous partition limiting the share to what it would have been at the withdrawal of Maganlal, another member of Tribhovan's branch. The defendants pleaded as to the property to be divided (1) that the plaintiff's residential house and certain ornaments should be brought into hotch-potch as belonging to the joint family, and (2) that the moveable and immoveable property of the deceased Kasandas, the sole representative of yet another branch, should not be brought into hotch-potch as it was the separate property of Kasandas and did not belong to the joint family.

The Subordinate Judge held as to the share claimed that the plaintiff was entitled to 1/3rd, and as to the property to be divided that the plaintiff's house and ornaments should not, but that Kasandas' moveable and immoveable property should, be brought into hotch-potch as part of the joint family estate.

This appeal is brought by the representatives of Shivalal's branch, contending that the share claimed should be not $\frac{1}{3}$ rd but $\frac{1}{4}$ th only and that the plaintiff's house should, but the moveables of Kasandas should not, be included in the division as joint family property.

Now as to the share claimed, the first plea based on the ancestor's Will and the second plea based on the previous partition and withdrawal of Lalbhai have been dropped and as regards the third plea based on the partition and withdrawal of Maganlal, it has been admitted by both parties that after that withdrawal the remaining members of the family continued to be joint and were not in the position of separated parceners who had reunited. It was argued at the trial on this third plea that the plaintiff's branch was entitled to a $\frac{3}{11}$ ths share, viz., two shares left out of the three shares due to it at the withdrawal of Maganlal plus one share subsequently due to it as one of the surviving branches out of the share of the deceased Kasandas' branch and that defendants' two branches were each entitled to $\frac{4}{11}$ ths, that is to say, the three shares each due to them at the withdrawal of Magan plus one share each subsequently due to them as surviving branches out of the share of the deceased Kasandas' branch. Plaintiff's branch was thus argued to be entitled to three shares and each of the defendants' branches to four shares out of the total of eleven shares for division. But in this appeal Mr. Rao, who has the support of Lalbhai's branch and represents directly Shivalal's branch, has urged that the share should not be $\frac{3}{11}$ ths but should be $\frac{1}{4}$ th or $\frac{3}{12}$ ths. He has put it in this way, that the share should be $\frac{1}{3}$ rd as prima facie due at the division of the three remaining branches less $\frac{1}{12}$ th withdrawn by Maganlal, one of the members of the branch now seeking partition, that is to say, $\frac{1}{3}$ rd minus $\frac{1}{12}$ th which is $\frac{1}{4}$ th or $\frac{3}{12}$ ths. It is argued that the defendants' branches, that is to say, Lalbhai's and Shivalal's branches should be allowed to divide between them the remaining $\frac{3}{4}$ ths or $\frac{9}{12}$ ths. This contention is based on the alleged necessity of preserving equal shares to each of the three branches as explained thus by Muttusami Ayyar, J.—

"The rule that, as between different branches, division should be by the stock..... is designed to ensure equality of partition in cases of vested interests held in co-parcenery, and to carry out in those cases the principle that those who have capacity to confer equal spiritual benefits on the common ancestor ought to take equal shares..."

and again in another passage:—

"At the first partial division, allotments due to the other co-parceners were determined by an act of the mind for the purpose of computing the shares which were allotted to those who desired to separate, and in the same manner the allotments made at the first partition should be taken into account in calculating the shares to be awarded at the second in order that unequal partition, which is forbidden by law, may be avoided. This view is confirmed by the Smriti Chandrika, in which it is said with reference to a second partition among reunited parceners, that the shares may be unequal where the common wealth was at the time of reunion made up of disproportionate contributions, and that the inequality must be proportionate to the extent of the contribution made by each parcenar at the time of re-union."

These passages occur at pages 364 and 365 of the judgment in the case of Manjanatha v. Narayana (1).

It seems to me necessary to examine the rule here laid down with special care, as though it was laid down a number of years ago, it does not appear to have been since referred to in any subsequent case in Madras, and no similar case has been reported from this Presidency or from any of the other Courts in India. My first observation on this case is this: that the rule as laid down for Madras would not ordinarily be necessary in this Presidency. It was apparently framed to prevent inequality where sons enforce partition from their father and joint uncles. Such partition might apparently be enforced in Madras, but here it could only occur by common agreement with full knowledge of the consequences. For it is a well-established rule that sons cannot enforce partition against their fathers and joint uncles in this Presidency. My second observation is this: that with due deference to the opinion of the learned Judges who decided the case in Madras it would not appear that the rule they have laid down would necessarily maintain the desired equality. If, for instance, the 3/11ths share argued for in this case, at the trial were given, then it is true that the branch would receive its full share as one of the surviving branches to the deceased Kasandas' branch. But if, as now argued here, only 1/4th or 3/12ths were given, then not only would the share taken by one member Magan be deducted, but the branch would also be deprived of its full 1/3rd or 4/12ths share as one of the three surviving branches to the share of the deceased Kasandas' branch. It is also not difficult to imagine other cases in which the rule would result in serious inequality. For instance, if one member of a branch withdrew part of the share of the branch and the other member left were subsequently to die, the remainder of the share of the branch would survive to the other branches. The result would be that the branch would not have got its full share. The remainder of that share would have gone to swell the shares of the other branches. Again, if one member of a branch were to withdraw while the family was poor, then that branch would never under the rule be allowed its full share of the subsequently accumulated wealth of the family obtained by the united efforts of all the branches. My third observation is that the learned Judges who decided the Madras case appear to have based their rule in part, at all events, on the equality of spiritual benefits to be conferred by the various branches, whereas little weight can be given to the doctrine of religious efficacy in this Presidency as pointed out by Mayne in his work on Hindu Law in paragraph 3 at page 2 and paragraph 509 at page 711 of the 8th Edition. My fourth observation on the Madras judgment is this: that it sought confirmation from the analogy of a partition between reunited brothers, as prescribed by the passage already quoted from the Smṛiti Chandrika occurring in Chapter XII paragraph 4 of that work. But that authority is only an authority in Southern India (see paragraphs 27 and 28 of Mayne's Hindu Law, at pages 28 and 29 of the 8th Edition) and has been expressly dissented from by the Mayukha, the authority recognised in Gujarat. This is the passage from the Mayukha: "Here some say that the unequal distribution being negatived by the phrase 'the shares must in that case be equal,' the prohibition of the 'eldest son's right' is repeated for the sake of making it clearly understood that although there is to be no inequality in making up the shares of the eldest, yet in the distribution, the shares may be even unequal, when made up of greater and lesser shares at the time of reuniting the property. But since the term 'eldest son's right' and the like is merely a declaration of the general meaning, therefore, if the contributions to the wealth were greater and less, still the share of each must be equal. And the same is the popular practice. Hence as the foundation of the practice is derived from this text, any supposition of a declaration contrary thereto is at variance with reason. For, another author says, 'The body of the law, like grammar, for the most part, is based on usage', in Chapter IV, section 9, paragraphs 2 and 3 of that work. This has also been pointed out by West and Buhler, Volume II, Book 2, paragraph 7A(1.c). It seems to me, therefore, that whatever force the rule might have as laid down by the learned Judges for Madras, it could not properly be applied to this case which comes from Gujarat. And it is significant that the rule was not applied by the parties in the year 1898, when they made a division into three shares of part of the moveable property and again in 1906, when they divided into three shares the sale profits of part of the immoveable property between the three branches of the family. The third share has, in my opinion, therefore, been rightly held to be the share to be given on the division of the remainder of the family property.

It seems to me indeed impracticable to frame any rule which would ensure absolute equality for all circumstances and for all branches and no a priori reason has been shown for applying the Madras rule to this Presidency. Nor have any texts been found in support of framing any such rule or departing from the general rule laid down by Lord Westbury: "According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu Law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property that he, that particular member, has a certain definite share" in Appovier's case 5, and further stated thus: "The position of any particular person...will be very important when the time for partition arrives, because it will determine the share to which he is then entitled. But until that time arrives he can never say, I am entitled to such a definite portion of the property; because next year the...division might be much smaller and the year after, much larger, as births or deaths supervene", in Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 273, at page 340 of the 8th Edition.

Mr. K. P. Govinda Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Muhamadans. The first defendant was married to the plaintiff in 1907. It is found that for some time after that the plaintiff kept a low caste woman as his concubine. It is not clear that at the time of the suit, she was still in his keeping. He married a second wife. He now sues for the restitution of conjugal rights against the first defendant. The District Munsif decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision. Hence this second appeal.

We are unable to agree with the District Judge. The grounds mentioned by him are not sufficient to nonsuit the plaintiff. It is suggested that this is not a bona fide suit, as it was instituted after the father-in-law sued the plaintiff for moneys due to him. This is not a ground for refusing relief. It was held in Scott v. Scott (1) that the Courts are not concerned with the sincerity of the plaintiff's motive, and that if there is no legal defence, the suit should be decreed. Another objection relates to the delay in bringing the suit. That again is no defence to the action. See Beauclerk v. Beauclerk (2). The main ground relied upon by Mr. Madhavan Nair is that the plaintiff consorted with a low caste woman and that the defendant has consequently a reasonable apprehension of cruelty. This defence was not put forward in the written statement. The decision in Husaini Begam v. Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan (3), on which the District Judge relied, proceeds on the ground that the husband charged the wife with adultery and made other serious unfounded charges. The learned Judges held that such a husband may reasonably be expected to ill-treat his wife. The Judicial Committee in Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (4) have laid down that there must be either actual violence or a reasonable apprehension of it. That decision is also authority for the position that on the question of legal cruelty, there is no difference between the English Law and the Muhammadan Law. The question of what amounts to cruelty was considered elaborately in Russell v. Russell (5). Lord Justice Lopes says: 'As we read that case, no husband could be found guilty of legal cruelty towards his wife unless he had either inflicted bodily injury upon her, or had so conducted himself towards her as to cause actual injury to her mental or bodily health, or so as to raise a reasonable apprehension that he would either inflict actual bodily injury upon her, or cause actual injury to her mental or bodily health. In a word, he must so have conducted himself towards her as to render future cohabitation more or less dangerous to her life, or limb, or mental or bodily health.' Lord Justice Lindley concurred in this opinion. Lord Justice Rigby who differed from the opinion of the majority of the Court is in substantial agreement with them on this point.

Applying the above tests, we are unable to hold that the defendant has proved that there has been any legal cruelty or any reasonable apprehension of it from the plaintiff. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif. We make no order as to costs in this and in the Courts below having regard to the relationship of the parties. Three months' time from this day for obeying the decree.

Appeal allowed; Suit decreed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 229 OF 1914.

July 16, 1915.

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the nearest heir of a deceased representative vatandar is maintainable in the Civil Court. [p. 926, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the first Class Subordinate Judge, at Sholapur, in Appeal No. 323 of 1912, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Pandharpur, in Civil Suit No. 169 of 1912.

Mr. G. K. Parekh, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Sathaye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff stating the death of a vatandar named Ramchandra alleged "that the Kulkarni Vatan is to be continued in the eldest family; that the defendant No. 1 whose name was entered in the register was not of the eldest family, and that the plaintiff was, and that in consequence of the defendant's objection, the plaintiff's name was not entered in the Vatan register. Therefore, the plaintiff brings this suit praying for a declaration (a) that he, the plaintiff, being of the eldest family, is the nearer heir of Ramchandra than the defendant; and (b) that the plaintiff has a right to have his name entered in the place of Ramchandra with respect to the Kulkarni Vatan at Bhalvani, he being of the eldest branch."

The lower Courts have held on the authority of Raoji v. Genu (1) that they have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and it has, therefore, been dismissed. In our opinion their decision is not correct. Raoji v. Genu (1) related to section 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874). On the other hand, Rahimkhan Hyderkhan v. Dadamiya Hyderkhan (2), which was distinguished in the lower Appellate Court, related to section 36 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. In that case it was said :

"The conclusive determination of the question whether the statutory condition of eldership or heirship is satisfied becomes, therefore, a matter of importance to a person claiming to be the eldest son or nearest heir, and it is a question which is not by the words of the Act reserved for the exclusive determination of the Collector. This view of section 36 was taken by this Court in Dalpat Jogidas v. Punja Zipa (3), where, upon review, it was held that a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was the nearest heir of a deceased representative *vatan*dar was maintainable, notwithstanding that it was manifest that the declaration was sought for the purpose of establishing a fact which would enable the plaintiff to have his name entered in the Vatan Register."

Those decisions were passed upon section 36 of the Act before it was amended in 1910. Section 36 then provided that: "A certificate of heirship or a decree of a competent Court shall, until revoked or set aside, be conclusive proof of the facts stated or determined in such certificate or decree." Reference to "a certificate of heirship, or a decree or order of a competent Court" is no longer in the same language. Whether or not the new reference has a different effect is a matter which we do not purpose to determine. The amended Act provides that:

"If at any time any person shall, by production of a certificate of heirship, or of a decree or order of a competent Court, satisfy the Collector that he is entitled to have his name registered as the nearest heir of such deceased *vatan*dar in preference to the person whose name the Collector has ordered to be registered, the Collector may subject to the foregoing provisos, cause the entry in the register to be amended accordingly."

Therefore, in connection with this question of heirship under the deceased *vatan*dar, the Act, as it stood before the amendment and as it now stands since the amendment, recognises the possibility of the production of a decree of a competent Court upon the question of heirship affecting the entries in the Vatan Register.

It has been argued that the second part of the declaration prayed in the plaint, namely, a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to have his name entered in the place of Ramchandra in the register is clearly a matter which would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. Let that be granted, it does not prevent the plaintiff from getting relief under the first head to which upon the authorities he is entitled. We are not prepared to agree with the learned Judge of the Appellate Court that a declaration under the first head, "as it would not be binding upon the Collector, would not serve any purpose whatever." As above stated, we do not propose to express any opinion as to the effect of the words of clause 3 of the proviso to the amended section. Being of opinion that the Court has jurisdiction to give the relief asked for in the first paragraph of the prayer we set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for trial. Costs costs in the cause.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

A suit to recover kattubadi from an inamdar who is not a cultivator, lies in the Civil and not in the Revenue Court.

Where a compromise of a suit entered into by a Hindu widow has the effect of alienating her husband's estate, and where she effects such compromise with the consent of her husband's reversioners entitled to succeed on her death, they are bound by it [p. 929, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Bezvada, in Small Cause Suit No. 649 of 1913.

Mr. K. G. Sarangaraja Aiyangar, for Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent is unrepresented. The suit was by the proprietor to recover kattubadi from a minor inamdar. The District Munsif held that, having regard to section 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act, the plaint ought to have been presented to the Revenue Court. On the authorities which have been cited before me this conclusion is wrong. In Gopiseti Narainsawmi Naidu v. Tallanraju Venkatasubrayudu (1), under similar circumstances it was decided that a suit for kattubadi is not beyond the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts. In Second Appeal No. 716 of 1913 a similar conclusion was come to with reference to quit rent. There is no allegation in this case that the inamdar is also a cultivator. Under these circumstances the decision of the District Munsif is wrong. It must be set aside and the District Munsif must be asked to restore the case to his file and dispose of it according to law.

Petition allowed; Suit remanded.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Godavary at Rajahmundry; in Appeal Suit No. 56 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 489 of 1909.

Mr. G. Venkataramiah, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondent.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 16th December 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the lower Courts in their conclusion that the appellants have not shown any title by virtue of the alleged gift by Antanna in favour of his grandsons Subbarayudu and Venkayya, on the strength of which plaintiff's claim can be resisted. We also think that no question arises of a partial alienation, because the grandsons had no power to alienate the property during the life-time of their mother. The only question that remains relates to the effect of the compromise in Original Suit No. 348 of 1886.

Before we can decide this second appeal we must call for a finding from the District

BANGARAYUDU v. PERAYYA SASTRY.

Judge upon the questions raised in paragraph 10 of the written statement of defendants Nos. 5 to 9 and paragraph 11 of the 4th defendant's written statement which we think are covered by the 3rd issue but have not been considered by the lower Courts.

In Original Suit No. 348 of 1886 there was a compromise of the suit brought by the purchasers under Exhibit I, who are the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 5 and 7, by which Garakamma and her son Venkatachalapati consented to the plaintiffs in that suit retaining the enjoyment of 5 acres 7 cents of the suit lands; but the lower Courts have not decided whether that compromise was a bona fide settlement of a doubtful claim and whether any other nearer reversioner than Venkatachalapati who might have been consulted was alive at the time.

We must, therefore, remand the appeal for a decision upon the following issues:—

1. Whether the compromise evidenced by Exhibits V and VI was a bona fide compromise by the parties concerned?

2. Whether it amounted to a valid alienation by the widow Garakamma representing the estate with the consent of the nearest reversioner?

Both sides may adduce fresh evidence on these points. The findings should be returned within three months from this date and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order the District Judge of Godavari submitted the following FINDINGS.—One additional witness has been heard for each side. On the 1st issue there can be no doubt that the compromise was a bona fide one by the parties concerned. It was given effect to and was entered into on the advice of Vakils, three of whom have signed including Mr. N. Subbarao. Under it plaintiffs were given possession and enjoyment of 5 acres 7 cents at Lolla and defendants retained 3 acres 49 cents at Vadapalli paying Rs. 150 down in cash, which presumably represented mesne profits and costs foregone. On the evidence and probabilities I find this issue in the affirmative. An attempt is made to argue that the words "parties concerned" mean something else than the parties concerned in the compromise, and refer to the parties litigant in this appeal. I cannot follow the Pleader into such deep waters.

2. Issue No. 2.—It is unnecessary to re-capitulate the history of the compromise, and what preceded it. These facts were already before their Lordships and are well understood by me. In my opinion the consent of the next reversioner makes the alienation valid and binding on the actual reversioner. Such consent raises a presumption of due inquiry and legal necessity if the presumption is not rebutted by more cogent proof. This is the language of the Calcutta High Court in Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (1). No evidence is brought forward here to rebut that presumption. Respondent's 1st witness, speaking of an event which occurred 29 years ago, does attempt to say something about Garakamma being forced into the compromise by the fear that her son would go to Jail. But this is a palpable falsehood because there was no such fear and the compromise was made under the advice of eminent Pleaders, of whom one Mr. N. Subbarao is available and might have been called. Such an absurd statement ought not to have been made in a serious Court of Justice.

3. Here is a case of a mother and her only son. The mother alienates with the son's consent, the motive for the consent clearly being that the compromise was a settlement of doubtful claims. At the date of the compromise Chalapati was aged 20. After his mother's death he would be heir. No one contemplated the possibility of this young man predeceasing his mother and the succession passing at some problematic future date to the other reversioners of Antanna. The dictum of the Full Bench in the Calcutta case has been accepted by all Courts and on the facts of the present case, common sense seems to me to make it clear that the compromise was a bona fide settlement of a doubtful claim and that the consent of the nearest reversioner Chalapati was sufficient to render it valid and binding. He was a young man with every prospect of issue. The compromise was on the basis of half and half and each party gained something, the widow retaining the more valuable lands. I can only regard the transaction as a perfectly bona fide one and one rendered valid and binding by the consent of the next reversioner, there being no rebuttal by more cogent proof of the presumption of legal necessity or of reasonable inquiry and honest belief. Chalapati, the person most affected, was a consenting party to 5 acres of his mother's land going out of their possession. If there was any fraud he stood to lose, being the heir to his mother and he certainly did not see the contingency of his dying before her. The latest decision is Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (2). There the Chief Justice goes so far as to say that the consent of the next reversioner to an alienation, though partial, is conclusive of its propriety. Looking to the special circumstance of the present case, this is a sound principle and applies with greater force here where the facts are so clear. No evidence has been adduced whether any other nearer reversioner than Chalapati, who might have been consulted, was alive at the time. Chalapati was the next reversioner with the possibility of heirs of his body and surely it cannot have been expected that the reversioners next after him, whoever and wherever they might be, should be called in and consulted before this alienation can be treated as valid. I answer the 2nd issue in the affirmative.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings. It is now contended as a point of law that a widow being a limited owner can in no circumstances make a valid compromise or be a party to a consent decree so as to bind the inheritance of the reversionary heirs. There is no doubt that while in some instances compromises by a limited owner may amount to family settlements, as in Musammam Hiran Bibi v. Musammam Sohan Bibi (3) and in Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (4), in other cases they cannot be placed on a higher footing than they would have as contracts or alienations. Vide Musammam Indro Koor v. Shaikh Aboul Burkat (5), Kambinayani Javvaji Timmaji v.

Kambinayani Javvaji Subbaraju (6), Imrit Komur v. Roop Narain Singh (7), Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katayani Dasee (8) and Bhogaraju Venkatarama Jogiraju v. Adapalli Seshayya (9). In the present case, assuming that the compromise of Original Suit No. 348 of 1886 by Garakamma could not be treated as more binding on the reversioners than an alienation, we asked the District Judge to find whether it amounted to a valid alienation. This question he has answered in the affirmative and he gives as a reason for his opinion that the nearest reversioner consented to it and that it was made under the advice of the legal advisers engaged in the suit. Then he says there is "no rebuttal by more cogent proof of the presumption of legal necessity or of reasonable enquiry and honest belief." Under these circumstances we consider that it is not open to the respondent's Pleader now to raise the contention that the District Judge should have discussed whether the alienation was not for justifiable necessity on account of the purpose for which Exhibits III and IV were executed, as it was open to the respondent to have urged at the hearing in the lower Appellate Court that the effect of these documents was to rebut the presumption arising from the circumstances under which the suit was compromised. In the memorandum of objections to the finding the ground has not been taken that the Judge improperly excluded these documents from his consideration.

We think that the learned District Judge was in error in relying on the expression of opinion of a single Judge in Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (2) as to the conclusive effect of the consent of the nearest reversioner upon an alienation by a widow, as the decision of the Court in that case did not go so far and the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench has since found support in the recent Privy Council decision in Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (10).

The law applicable to a suit for damages for slander in India is the same as the English Law. JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—On the original side of this Court the plaintiff-respondent has been awarded a decree for Rs. 500 damages for slander uttered by the appellant Robertson, an Advocate of this Court, who now appeals. Robertson occupied a house belonging to the plaintiff at Pauktaw, Insein, free of rent. The house had been unoccupied for some time and was in need of repair and Robertson stated that he was to be allowed, if he did it up, to occupy it free of rent until it could be sold. The house was burnt down on the 4th of June 1913. The plaintiff had taken out a fire insurance policy for Rs. 13,000 on this house through the defendant and Finlay,

Fleming & Company were the agents for the Insurance Company. Robertson reported to the agents that the fire was an act of incendiarism and in his opinion was at the instigation of Mrs. Murray, the plaintiff: that is the slander complained of. The defence was that it was a privileged communication and made without malice. If the facts are as stated by the defendant as to what he saw at the time, it was clearly an act of incendiarism and there is no reason to disbelieve his evidence as to these facts. Most of Robertson's furniture was burnt in the fire and was uninsured, but he with the Insurance Company had the common interest. I think it was a moral duty cast on Robertson to report the facts within his knowledge to the agents of the Insurance Company. The learned Judge on the original side has held that the occasion was privileged, and in my opinion it was clearly so. But the learned Judge has thought there was no basis for the defendant's opinion that the fire was at the instance of plaintiff. It is not clear from the judgment whether the learned Judge found that there was actual malice on the part of the defendant in expressing that opinion or whether the learned Judge held that he had acted without due care and attention in holding that opinion. I think the effect of the judgment is that the defendant could not have honestly thought that the fire was at the instance of the plaintiff and, therefore, was actuated by malice. The plaintiff had served a notice upon the defendant to quit the house and he had refused to do so. A Mrs. Hood was living in the house and her husband objected to her doing so. Defendant was told by Mrs. Hood that a few days before the fire Mrs. Murray, the plaintiff, had told her mother, Mrs. Paulini, and Miss Pinto who was with her that she should not let her daughter remain in the house as the house might be burnt down, that Pauktaw was a disreputable place and insinuated that Hood might burn this house down. Koreishi, the broker, also told the defendant that Mrs. Murray, the plaintiff, had told him that Hood was troubling her and complaining that Mrs. Hood was staying with Robertson and that she was afraid of Hood doing something to it and that she was afraid her house might be burnt down. Koreishi says that she told him to tell Robertson that Hood was arranging to burn down the house, or that he, Robertson, was to be beaten and that he had better leave the house, and that he had informed Robertson of what Mrs. Murray had told him. The fact that those statements were made by Mrs. Murray to the witness and reported to the defendant is not disbelieved by the learned Judge, but he holds that the proper inference to draw from them is that she was afraid that Hood might either burn down the house or get budmashes to do so.

The law applicable to a suit for damages for slander is the same as the English Law. Under that law if the occasion is privileged, the onus is on the plaintiff to show actual malice in the defendant and if the defendant made his statement honestly, he would not be liable for slander even though there was no reasonable ground for his belief. The following cases are sufficient authority for this proposition:—Clark v. Molyneux (1), Stuart v. Bell (2) and Collins v. Cooper (3). The defendant refused to apologise before suit and that is relied upon as evidence of malice. But it is equally consistent with the defendant honestly adhering to his opinion. The absence of any reasonable ground for the opinion would be evidence of malice but in this case, apart altogether from the statements made by Mrs. Murray, the fact that the house was insured for Rs. 13,000 and apparently was worth Rs. 10,000, for that was the sum paid by the Insurance Company, and the fact that it was clearly an act of incendiarism might be sufficient to warrant an honest belief in the mind of the defendant that the plaintiff must have been connected with the fire and Hood would have hardly acquainted Mrs. Murray with his intention of burning down her house unless Mrs. Murray acquiesced in his doing so. In my opinion the plaintiff has not made out that the defendant did not honestly believe that the house was burnt down at the instance of the plaintiff. I would allow this appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144, —Suit for declaration of title and assessment of rent—Suit for possession—Tenancy—Presumption

The plaintiff sued for declaration of title to land and for assessment of rent, praying also that for the years antecedent to the suit damages for use and occupation may be decreed. The defendant pleaded adverse possession for more than 12 years:

Held, that the suit was essentially for recovery of possession and was, therefore, barred by time under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. [p 933, col. 2.]

If a person squats upon the land of another and if the latter accepts him as his tenant; either by express declaration or by implication, the squatter acquires the status of a tenant. But it is open to the proprietor to repudiate the tenancy and to evict the person who has come upon the land without his consent. It is impossible to support on principle the proposition that if a person occupies the land of another, it is open to the proprietor, any length of time afterwards, to treat the occupier as his tenant, although the latter has not given any indication that he intended to hold the land as tenant. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for declaration of title to land for assessment of rent. The case for the plaintiff is that he is the proprietor of an extensive zemindari, that there are numerous tracts of waste land within his estate and that various persons, without his knowledge and without settlement from him, have taken possession of these lands and have brought them under cultivation. According to the plaintiff, the defendant is one of such persons, and in 1898, in the course of Settlement proceedings under the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was discovered that the defendant was in occupation of some land without settlement from the plaintiff. The defendant was, however, described in the Settlement record as an intermediate tenure-holder who held without payment of rent. The plaintiff finally states that the defendant, though thereafter repeatedly asked to take a settlement of the disputed land, has, on various pretexts, never attored to him. The plaintiff consequently asks that rent may be assessed at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha and prays that for the years antecedent to the suit damages for use and occupation may be decreed at the same rate. The defendant resists the claim on the ground that he has a niskar or rent-free title, that neither he nor his ancestors who were in occupation for many years ever paid rent to the plaintiff and that the claim for assessment of rent is barred by limitation. The Court of first instance found that the defendant held under a rent-free title. The Court also held that if the defendant had no such title, the claim for assessment of rent was barred by limitation. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that the fact that the defendant and his predecessors had been in occupation of the land for many years without payment of rent does not show that the defendant has a rent-free title; he has also held that the claim for assessment of rent is not barred by limitation. In this view the claim of the plaintiff has been decreed. On the present appeal by the defendant, it has been argued that the claim is essentially one for recovery of possession of land and is barred by limitation, as neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor has been shown to have been ever in possession of the land either directly or through tenants. On behalf of the respondent it has been argued on the authority of the decision in Nityanund Ghose v. Kissen Kishore (1) that the defendant was presumably a tenant under the plaintiff, that it is not proved that the defendant at any time set up a hostile title, and that consequently the claim for assessment of rent is not barred by limitation.

In our opinion the Subordinate Judge has taken an erroneous view of the relative situation of the parties and that the claim for assessment of rent is clearly barred by limitation.

Reliance has been principally placed on behalf of the respondent upon the following passage from the judgment in Nityanund Ghose v. Kissen Kishore (1): "Here it is a very usual thing for a man to squat on a piece of land or to take into cultivation an unoccupied or waste piece of land. Tenancy, in a great many districts in Bengal, commences in this way, and where it does so commence, it is presumed that the cultivator cultivates by the permission of the landlord, and is under obligation to his landlord to pay him a fair rent, when the latter may choose to demand it. Thus, the established usage of the country regards these parties as landlord and tenant, and unless the landlord chooses thus to treat him, the cultivator is not regarded, as he would be by the law as administered in England, as a trespasser, but as a tenant, and he would be so although he may never have expressly acknowledged the landlord's right or entered into any express contract with him for the payment of rent. If he chooses to cultivate the zemindar's lands, and the zemindar lets him, there is an implied contract between them, creating a relationship of landlord and tenant." Reference has also been made to the dictum of Jackson, J., in Ranee Lalun Monee v. Sona Monee Dabee (2) to the effect that if the parties are in possession, they make themselves tenants by use and occupation of the land. Our attention has also been drawn to the decisions in Lukee Kanto Dass Chowdhry v. Sumeeruddi Lusker (3), Surnomoyee v. Denonath Gir (4), Azim Sirdar v. Ram Lal Shaha (5) and Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Ramranjan Chakarbutty (6). On the basis of these decisions, it has been broadly contended that if a person squats on the land of another and proceeds to cultivate it, he makes himself a tenant under such person, that although the proprietor does not expressly give permission to the squatter to occupy the land and the latter does not expressly contract to pay rent to the proprietor yet a tenancy is established by presumption, and that it becomes open to the proprietor any length of time afterwards to demand rent from the occupier. In our opinion, this proposition is not deducible from the cases mentioned. It is perfectly plain that if a person squats upon the land of another and if the latter accepts him as his tenant, either by express declaration or by implication, the squatter acquires the status of a tenant. But it is clearly open to the proprietor to repudiate the tenancy and to evict the person who has come upon the land without his consent. It is further impossible to support on principle the proposition that if a person occupies the land of another, it is open to the proprietor, any length of time afterwards, to treat the occupier as tenant, although the latter has not given any indication that he intended to hold the land as tenant. This is in accord with the decision of Maharaja Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Gagan Chandra Chuckerbutty (7) and Mati Lal v. Darjeeling Municipality (8). There is a further difficulty in the way of the plaintiff-respondent. The principle which he enunciates as deducible from the case of Nityanand Ghose v. Kissen Kishore (1) applies only to squatters. In the case before us, the defendant was recorded as an intermediate tenure-holder, and, the entries from the Record of Rights, which have been placed before us, show conclusively that there are settled raiyats under the defendant. The defendant, consequently, is not a squatter in any sense of the term, and even if the broad proposition formulated by the respondent were accepted, it would be of no assistance to his case. It is further plain that although the defendant was recorded as an intermediate tenure-holder in the Record of Rights, he has never been treated as tenant by the plaintiff or his predecessors. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the defendant occupied the land without his permission and has never attorned to him; not only was the entry upon the land unauthorised, the defendant when called upon to take a settlement has strenuously refused to accept a tenancy from him. The defendant also does not allege that he was ever a tenant under the plaintiff. Consequently, there is no room for the application of a presumption of tenancy between the parties. If it had been established that the defendant had at any time held as a tenant under the plaintiff or that the plaintiff had accepted the defendant as his tenant, the question might no doubt arise whether the defendant could at a subsequent period effectively set up the plea of adverse possession, when such adverse possession was not brought to the knowledge of the person whom he had acknowledged as his landlord. Here, it is not the case of either party that a tenancy ever existed, and this is emphasised by the fact that although the plaintiff seeks for assessment of rent for the future, in so far as the period antecedent to the suit is concerned, he claims damages for use and occupation on the assumption that up to the date of the institution of the suit at any rate the defendant was not his tenant. The suit is essentially for recovery of possession. It is nonetheless a suit for recovery of possession, though the plaintiff seeks only to have rent assessed. He does not, indeed, claim to evict the defendant and to have actual occupation of the land; but he does seek to have possession by realisation of rent from the defendant. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Chundrabullee Debia v. Luckhee Debia (9) and by this Court in Abhoy Churn Pal v. Kally Pershad Chatterjee (10), a suit of this character must be treated as a suit for recovery of possession, and the rule of limitation applicable to suits for recovery of possession must be applied. If the contrary view were maintained, the result would be that a person dispossessed by a trespasser might, any length of time afterwards when a suit for recovery of actual possession would be effectively met by the plea of limitation, maintain a suit for assessment of rent on the allegation that the defendant was his tenant. The plaintiff has not suggested—and even if he had made a suggestion, there is nothing to show that it could have been supported—that he was ever in actual occupation of the land in suit; he has not shown that the possession of the defendant was at any time possession on his behalf; nor has he established that he was in possession of this land by receipt of rent from the defendant within twelve years antecedent to the suit. It is plain that there is no answer to the plea of limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with cost, in all the Courts.

Appeal against the decision of the Acting first Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 142 of 1912.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Dewan Bahadur G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a Hindu wife who sued her husband for separate maintenance. She was defeated in the trial Court, because the learned Judge there held, first, that the plaintiff voluntarily deserted her husband, the defendant, and secondly, that the unchastity pleaded in bar of the plaintiff's claim was proved.

The parties to the suit were married in 1872 or 1873. The rupture occurred either in 1885 or in 1896. According to the defendant it was in 1885 that he abandoned his wife, because he detected her in the very act of adultery. The wife, who denies all unchastity, says that the separation occurred in 1896 when she was abandoned and expelled by her husband. It is admitted that in 1887 the defendant married another woman. This suit was filed in April 1912. The main object of this appeal, as the learned Pleader Mr. Desai has candidly made known to us, is to remove the stigma of unchastity which the lower Court's judgment has attached to the plaintiff. And here, we think, the plaintiff is entitled to this Court's pronouncement in her favour. The judgment of the learned Judge below is upon this point unsatisfactory. For his conclusion is couched in these halting and hesitating words: "For all these reasons it looks to me that she has not been quite faithful to her husband." It is not, we think, upon such a doubtful expression of opinion that a woman is to be branded as unchaste by judgment of a Court, and the learned Judge's attention might with advantage be directed to the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nawab Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Nawab Husaini Begum (1) where their Lordships had occasion to comment upon a similarly objectionable finding which in that case was expressed in these words: "although unchastity is not duly proved, yet I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff's character is not free from suspicion." Upon that the Judicial Committee observed: "Their Lordships cannot help considering an opinion of this kind regarding a serious charge as unsatisfactory.

YESUBHA BHARATAR v. SADASHIV GANESH DESPONDE.

Either the allegation of unchastity was established or it was not; if the evidence was not sufficient or not reliable there was an end of the charge, so far as the particular matter in issue was concerned, and it was hardly proper to give expression to what the Judge calls 'suspicion.' In our present case the learned Judge's excursion into the regions of mere suspicion, is the more unfortunate, because direct ocular testimony was adduced to prove that this woman was an adulteress, and the testimony was expressly disbelieved, and in our opinion very rightly disbelieved by the learned Judge. No attempt has been made to rehabilitate either these witnesses or the witnesses who spoke to vague rumour as to the appellant's character, and, indeed, Mr. Rao has frankly admitted that he is not in a position to press this charge of unchastity. We must, therefore, in the appellant's interests dissociate ourselves from the learned trial Judge's finding upon this point and formally record our opinion that there is not upon this record any evidence sufficient to warrant any imputation against the plaintiff's moral character.

But the plaintiff in order to succeed in this suit must show that the defendant, her husband, abandoned, or deserted or expelled her without justifying cause. Her story in the plaint is that in 1890 the husband ill-treated her and finally beat her and, in her own words, kicked her out of the house, but notwithstanding that, she continued occasionally to visit him up till 1899. In that year she ceased to visit him, because he stopped her from entering his house. That account apparently includes a charge of cruelty as well as abandonment. But there is no evidence of cruelty and Mr. Desai for the appellant admits that the charge of cruelty is unsustainable. We have, therefore, only to consider the case of desertion or expulsion.

According to the plaintiff's deposition, the defendant expelled her from his house about three years after he had married the 2nd wife. The account, however, is not quite consistent and there are various indications in the lady's deposition that her testimony is such as ought not to be accepted without corroboration. Now, her story, if it be true, was capable of easy corroboration. For she tells us that there were four witnesses to the events upon which she relied, viz., Gundoba, Jaywant, Duyanoba and Bhan Desai. Not one of these four men was examined as a witness, and although the plaintiff did cite Bhan Desai, she subsequently refrained from calling him. So far, therefore, the plaintiff's story is weakened by the absence of the corroboration which should be forthcoming and has not been offered.

What remains of her case seems to us to be disposed of by reference to the notice which she served upon her husband on the 29th of July 1910. It is Exhibit 34 in the suit and the ground for it is stated in these terms: "Notice is given you that you are my husband. After the marriage you and I, living together for several years, managed wordly affairs. But as you married a second time some years after our marriage, I could not pull on in the house, and quarrels took place often-times. Therefore I had to maintain myself by residing at my mother's place". This notice, in our opinion, gives the true key to this suit and the real explanation of the division between this couple. The evidence shows that the plaintiff, an only daughter of well-to-do parents, was petted and beloved by them. Used to such an environment, it was natural that on the introduction of a rival into her house she should resent the consequences and should refuse to accept that position of submission which the Hindu Law ascribes to a wife so placed. We are satisfied on the evidence that it was her natural revolt from this position which led to the quarrel and induced her to leave her husband's house of her own accord. If she had been expelled or ill-treated by the husband, she had numerous and powerful friends, who, we must suppose, would have been ready to take her part and to vindicate her claims against the husband. This inference seems to us to be supported by the long delay, which occurred before the plaintiff was minded to seek relief. On her showing she was expelled in 1896; yet from that year down to 1910 she makes no move or claim or attempt to assert her rights. The only explanation which we can find of this, consistent with the evidence, is that she was conscious that she had voluntarily deserted her husband and had so forfeited whatever rights she might otherwise have had against him.

On these grounds we agree with the learned Judge below in thinking that the plaintiff is shown voluntarily to have deserted her husband, and on that ground she is disentitled to claim separate maintenance from him.

The appeal must, in our opinion, be dismissed, the decree of the Court below being confirmed.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4—'Undivided family', meaning of—Family member, right of, to compel outsider to accept money value for his share in family property.

The expression 'undivided family' in section 4 of the Partition Act must be taken to mean undivided qua the dwelling house in question and to be a family which owns the house but has not divided it. The condition is fulfilled if the parties are co-owners, whether as joint tenants or tenants-in-common; in either case a member of a family so owning is entitled to claim that the transferee of a share of such dwelling house, who is a stranger, shall accept a money valuation of his share therein. [p. 936, col. 2; p. 937, col. 1.]

Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad, A. W. N. (1908) 126; 5 A. L. J. 352; 4 M. L. T. 38; 30 A. 324, referred to.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Wadhupal Oodharam, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—The dwelling house in suit belonged to Lilaram, father of the 1st defendant. Lilaram had four sons—the 1st defendant, a second son, who sold to the plaintiff, and two others. The 1st defendant and plaintiff's vendor effected partition with the two other sons, and in that partition the house in suit fell to the share of defendant No. 1 and plaintiff's vendor.

Plaintiff has now sued for partition and the only question for decision in this appeal is whether defendant No. 1 is entitled to claim under section 4 of the Partition Act, IV of 1893, that plaintiff should accept valuation of his share in the house. Mr. Wadhupal accepts the ruling referred to by the District Judge in the case of Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad (1), where it was held that the expression 'undivided family' in section 4 of the Partition Act must be taken to mean undivided qua the dwelling house in question and to be a family which owns the house but has not divided it. But Mr. Wadhupal seeks to distinguish this case on two grounds. In the first place, he says that the family that owns the house is the family of four brothers and that as these brothers effected partition, it cannot be said to be an undivided family. But the house is not now owned by the four brothers. It is owned by two brothers, defendant No. 1 and plaintiff's vendor, who have not effected partition inter se and who are, therefore, undivided qua the dwelling house. Mr. Wadhupal's next point is that the other brothers having separated defendant No. 1 and plaintiff's vendor are no longer joint tenants in respect of the house in suit, and he cites in support of this proposition the case of Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2). But in that case the Privy Council decided that if one co-parcener is separated from the others there was no presumption of union in respect of others who had not so separated. The question as to whether the others hold their property in severalty or in joint tenancy or in common is a question of fact not governed by any presumption. But it makes no difference whether these two brothers, the defendant No. 1 and plaintiff's vendor, owned the property as joint tenants or as tenants-in-common. All that is necessary to fulfil the requirement of the Partition Act is that they should be undivided qua the dwelling house. That condition is fulfilled if they Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act (I of 1907), s. 103B (3)—Nature of evidence required for rebuttal of presumption—Suit for declaration of title to land and assessment of rent—Decree dismissing suit but declaring plaintiff's zemindari right in land—Non-payment of rent—Long possession—Adverse possession—Limitation.

In a suit for declaration of title to land and assessment of rent, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, but gave the plaintiff a declaration that he had zemindari right in the disputed land:

Held, that the Court by the declaration merely intended to hold that the land was situated within the ambit of the plaintiff's estate, and not that the defendants or their predecessors held, at any time, as tenants under the plaintiff. [p. 937, col. 2; p. 938, col. 1.]

Under sub-section 3 of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stands under Act I of 1907 the evidence by which the entry may be proved to be incorrect, may be evidence of facts of a date prior to that of the publication of the Record of Rights, although evidence of facts subsequent to the publication may also throw an important light upon the solution of the problem. [p. 938, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the defendants were treated by the plaintiff as trespassers in 1894 and notwithstanding the entry in the Record of Rights in 1898 to the effect that the defendants were settled *raiya*s, the defendants had since that date repudiated the theory of a possible tenancy:

Held, that the entry in the Record of Rights had been amply rebutted, in the absence of any suggestion and any evidence in support of a possible allegation that between 1894 and 1898 a tenancy was created by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant. [p. 938, col. 2.]

Where, according to the defendants, they and their ancestors have been in occupation of the disputed land from generation to generation without payment of rents, and the plaintiff has failed to prove that he or his predecessor has ever been in possession of the land by actual occupation or receipt of rent:

Held, that under the circumstances, the claim for assessment of rent, which is really a claim for possession of the land, is barred by limitation. [p. 938, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Noakhali, dated the 22nd February 1911, affirming that of the Munsif of Feni, dated the 16th July 1910.

Babu Romesh Chunder Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for assessment of rent. His allegations are that the defendants are tenants of some land within his estate, that they have unlawfully taken possession of the disputed land which is not comprised within their tenancy, that in 1894 in the course of Settlement proceedings they were found in occupation of this land, and that although they were then entered in the Record of Rights as settled *raiya*s, they have not attorned to him and have not taken settlement at a fair and reasonable rent. The defendants urged that they are rent-free holders, and that the claim is in any view barred by limitation. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, but gave the plaintiff a declaration that he had zemindari right in the disputed land. The defendants were satisfied with this decree as it did not hurt them in any way, but the plaintiff preferred an appeal. The Subordinate Judge has confirmed the decree of the primary Court on the ground that the claim for assessment of rent was barred by limitation. In the present appeal it has been argued for the plaintiff that as the decree of the Court of first instance was not challenged on behalf of the defendants, it must be taken that they were tenants under the plaintiff and consequently no question of limitation could arise. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention.

The Court of first instance, when it declared that the plaintiff had zemindari right in the disputed land, merely intended to hold, as is clear from an examination of the judgment, that the land was situated within the ambit of his estate. The Court found that as the land was surrounded by mal lands of the zemindari it might be deemed to be mal land; but the Court did not find that the defendants or their predecessors held, at any time, as tenants under the plaintiff. The defendants are consequently not embarrassed by the declaration in favour of the plaintiff, which they never questioned by way of an appeal: Maharaja Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Nazir Mahommad (1).

We have next to determine, whether the claim for assessment of rent is or is not barred by limitation. The plaintiff contends that the claim is not barred in view of the entry in the Record of Rights, published on the 17th December 1898, to the effect that the defendants were settled *raiya*s. Under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act this entry must be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. We may here observe parenthetically that there is a slight difference in language between sub-section (3) of section 103B as it stands under Act I of 1907 and section 103B as it stood under Act III of 1898. Under the latter Act, every entry in a Record of Rights finally published was to be presumed to be correct until the contrary was proved. Under sub-section 3 of section 103B as it stands under Act I of 1907, every entry in a Record of Rights shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether the introduction of the words "by evidence" effects an alternation in the law. But it is plain that the evidence by which the entry may be proved to be incorrect, may be evidence of facts of a date prior to that of the publication of the Record of Rights: Sheonandan Persad v. Bacha Raut (2). In fact, as the question primarily is whether the entry in the Record of Rights was correct at the time when it was made, that is, correctly stated the facts as they stood at that time, evidence of facts of a date prior to the publication of the record must be admissible, although evidence of facts subsequent to the publication may also throw an important light upon the solution of the problem. In the case before us, there was a dispute between the plaintiff and the defendants in the course of Settlement proceedings. The plaintiff contended that the defendants were not in occupation of the disputed land, while the defendants asserted that they were in occupation as rent-free holders. Evidence was taken and, on the 6th May 1894 it was decided that the possession of the defendants was proved. We start then with the position that in 1894 the plaintiff repudiated the defendants and declined to recognise them as tenants; his case at the time was that they were trespassers. On the other hand, the defendants asserted that they held as rent-free holders; they did not claim to hold as tenants under the plaintiff. To this must be added the statement made by the plaintiff in his plaint in this suit that, although since 1898, when the Record of Rights was finally published, the defendants have been repeatedly asked to take settlement at fair and equitable rates, they have not attorned to him and have fraudulently omitted to do so. We have thus the facts that the defendants were treated by the plaintiff as trespassers in 1894 and that notwithstanding the entry in the Record of Rights in 1898, the defendants have since that date repudiated the theory of a possible tenancy. We are of opinion, in these circumstances, that the entry in the Record of Rights has been amply rebutted, in the absence of any suggestion and any evidence in support of a possible allegation that between 1894 and 1898 a tenancy was created by the plaintiff in favour of the defendants. The position then is that while, according to the defendants, they and their ancestors have been in occupation of the disputed land from generation to generation without payment of rents, the plaintiff has failed to prove that he or his predecessor has ever been in possession of the land by actual occupation or receipt of rent. We are of opinion that, in these circumstances, the claim for assessment of rent, which is really a claim for possession of the land, is barred by limitation and the suit has been rightly dismissed: Chundrabullee v. Luckhea (3), Abhay Churn Pal v. Kally Pershad Chatterjee (4), Dharani Kant Lalari v. Gabar Ali

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 917; 22 C.L.J. 122.

(2) 4 Ind. Cas. 54; 9 C. L. J. 284.

Shipper, liability of—“At shipper’s risk with option of carrying on deck” in the Bill of Lading, meaning of.

Apart from the general law which imposes on a carrier by sea the duty of carrying goods under decks, except in the case of express contract or custom to the contrary, the meaning of the clause “at shipper’s risk without option of carrying on deck” is clearly in favour of the ship-owner and he is exempted from liability for damages caused to the goods by want of ventilation, by the terms of the clause “at shipper’s risk” though he did not exercise the option of carrying the goods on deck.

Mr. MacDonell, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hancock, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was for damages for negligence in carrying betel leaves in baskets on a voyage of one of the defendant Company’s steamers from Calcutta to Rangoon in October 1914. The baskets were stowed in between the decks, and owing to want of sufficient air or ventilation there for betel leaves they went bad. The question in the case was whether the defendant Company was exempted from liability from the terms of the Bill of Lading under which the goods were carried. The form of Bill of Lading as originally printed exempts the Company from almost every conceivable liability, but yet another clause was added to the Bill of Lading in question, being stamped across the printed matter. Its terms are “At shipper’s risk with option of carrying on deck.” Even without reference to the general law which imposes on a carrier by sea the duty of carrying goods under decks except in the case of express contract or custom to the contrary, the meaning of the clause is perfectly plain and free from ambiguity. Not only the words “at shipper’s risk,” are necessarily in favour of the ship-owner, but the words “with option of carrying on deck” are in his favour, and I mean that the option is with the ship-owner. It would be indeed surprising to find any ship-owner inserting a clause in his Bill of Lading form favouring the shipper.

The Company was exempted from liability by the terms of the clause “at shipper’s risk” although it did not exercise the option of carrying the goods on deck. The decree of the Small Cause Court in favour of the shipper was contrary to law and is set aside. The suit is dismissed with costs. The plaintiff must pay the defendant Company’s costs of this application—one gold mohur as Advocate’s fee.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Entry in Record of Rights before amendment of 1898 disputed—Presumption—Repudiation by both parties—Burden of proof—Possession—Long possession without payment of rent and with assertion of title, effect of.

No presumption of correctness can apply to an entry made, after the decision of a dispute, in a Record of Rights before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act by Act III of 1898. [p. 940, col. 2.]

It is open, however, to the parties to agree that the entry is not correct, and must be repudiated, though they are not at one as to what should be substituted in its place. [p. 940, col. 2.]

Hence, where the plaintiff repudiates the entry as fraudulently obtained, and the defendants repudiate it as erroneously made, the Court should not place upon the defendant the burden of rebutting the entry upon which the plaintiff does not place reliance. [p. 940, col. 2.]

When the plaintiff comes into Court on the allegation that the defendants have never attorned to him, there is no room for the suggestion that the possession of the defendants was possession on his behalf. [p. 941, col. 1.]

Long possession of the disputed lands by the defendants and their predecessors without payment of rent and under assertion of a rent-free title justifies the inference that the defendants had the title they set up. [p. 941, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Tippera, dated the 24th May 1910, reversing that of the Munsif of Comilla, dated the 18th September 1909.

Babu Girija Prosonno Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti, Gobind Chunder Dey Roy and Romesh Chunder Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by two of the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of land with mesne profits or, in the alternative, for assessment of rent. The case for the plaintiff is that he is the owner of an extensive zemindari, that within his estate there are large tracts of land whereof possession has been taken by different persons without his knowledge and consent, that the defendants are persons of this description, that they are in occupation without title to the disputed lands in respect of which they wrongfully secured an entry in the Settlement Record on the 14th July 1898 to the effect that they were settled raiyats, and that thereafter they have neither attorned to him nor paid him rent. The plaintiff consequently seeks to eject the defendants as trespassers; he prays in the alternative that if, for any reason, ejectment is not decreed, rent may be assessed on the land in their occupation. The claim is valued at Rs. 79-3-3, namely, Rs. 50 as the market price of the land in suit and Rs. 29-3-3 as the amount of mesne profits. The defendants resist the claim on the two-fold ground that it is barred by limitation, and that they are rent-free holders. They assert that they themselves and their ancestors were in possession from generation to generation for upwards of a century; they also repudiate the entry in the Record of Rights as incorrect and state that they should have been recorded as rent-free holders. The Court of first instance found upon the evidence that the lands had not been proved to be mal, that the plaintiff had never been in possession thereof by actual occupation or receipt of rent and that from the long possession of the defendants and their predecessors, the legitimate inference was that they were rent-free holders. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed this decision. He has held that the defendants had failed to rebut the entry in the Record of Rights and that the plaintiff was consequently entitled to rent at the rate claimed by him. On the present appeal, it has been argued, first, that no question arises as to the entry in the Record of Rights which had been repudiated by both the parties in the Court of first instance; secondly, that the claim is barred by limitation; and thirdly, that the defendants hold under a rent-free grant. In our opinion these contentions are well founded.

As regards the first ground, it may be observed that as the entry was made on the 14th July 1898 before the Bengal Tenancy Act was amended by Act III of 1898 which came into force on the 2nd November 1898, any question as to the correctness of the entry must be decided with reference to sub-section 2 of section 109 as it stood before the amendment. That sub-section provides that every undisputed entry in the record shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved. In the case before us, the entry was made after the decision of a dispute, and consequently no presumption of correctness could apply to it. But under section 9 of Act III of 1898, the decision by the Revenue Officer had the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and was final. It was obviously open, however, to the parties to agree that the entry was not correct and must be repudiated, though they might not be at one as to what should be substituted in its place. The plaintiff repudiates the entry as fraudulently obtained by the defendants; the defendants repudiate it as erroneously made. In these circumstances, the District Judge should not have held that the burden lay upon the defendants to rebut an entry upon which the plaintiff did not place reliance. The first ground must, therefore, prevail.

As regards the second ground, the Court of first instance found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the land was mal or that he had ever been in possession thereof by actual occupation or by receipt of rent. The District Judge has not reversed this finding, and, on the record as it stands, the finding cannot be successfully assailed. Besides, as the plaintiff comes into Court on the allegation that the defendants had not attorned to him, there is no room for the suggestion that the possession of the defendants was possession on his behalf. The claim is consequently barred by limitation: Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Gabar Ali Khan (1).

As regards the third ground, the Court of first instance held that the long possession of the disputed lands by the defendants and their predecessors without payment of rent and under assertion of a rent-free title justified the inference that the defendants had the title they set up. This view is obviously right: Dharmput Singh v. Russomoyee (2); Raddha Gobind Doss v. Prokash Chunder Doss (3). The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 23—Thatched roof house changed to pukka three-storeyed house—Discharge of water—Additional burden.

The defendant had a single-storeyed house with a thatched roof. One portion of the thatched roof discharged the rain water on the plaintiff's land between the houses of the two parties. He removed his thatched house and built a three-storeyed pukka house with five spouts on the roof to discharge water on to the land:

Held, that there was a considerable increase of burden within the meaning of section 23 of the Easements Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Saharanpur.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the defendant has increased the burden within the meaning of section 23 of the Easements Act. The facts are simple. The defendant had a single-storeyed house with a thatched roof. One portion of the thatched roof discharged the rain water on a small lane between the houses of the two parties. He has removed his thatched house and has now built a three-storeyed pukka house and he has put spouts on the roof of the house to discharge water on to the land between the plaintiff's wall and his wall. The Court of first instance held that there was really no increase in the burden except where the water from one spout fell on to the wall of the plaintiff's house. That spout, the Court ordered, should be altered in its direction. The lower Appellate Court has held that the spouts clearly threw an additional burden on the servient heritage. It seems to me that there can be no question that there is a considerable difference between the burden which the servient heritage formerly bore and that which it now bears. In the first place double the quantity of water now falls upon it. The roof of the defendant's house was a sloping roof. Half of the water fell in one direction and the other half in another direction. It is now a flat roof and the whole of the water is discharged through five apertures and falls from a greatly increased height on to the land below it. In my opinion there has been a considerable additional burden placed upon the plaintiff's land and the order of the Court below in regard to the spouts on the roof on the second floor of the defendant's house is fully justified. If the defendant wishes to discharge his water on this land, he must so arrange that there is no addition to the burden which the servient heritage bore. The burden he has now placed upon it is a considerably increased one and in my opinion there is no force in this appeal. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—An order for staying the further trial of a suit is similar to an order adjourning the trial of the suit and the observations in the judgments pronounced in the Full Bench case *Tuljaram Row v. Limitation—Assertion of adverse title for more than 12 years—Landlord and tenant—Encroachment for landlord's benefit—Doctrine, applicability of.

The doctrine which would entitle the landlord to say that there is presumption that an encroachment was for his benefit has no application where the plaint and all proceedings in the suit do not suggest that the encroachment was a part of the holding. [p. 943, col. 1.]

Where more than 15 years before suit there was a direct assertion of title negating the theory of encroachment which would have conferred upon the disputed land the character of an addition to the original holding, the endeavour to escape from the plea of limitation based on adverse possession for more than 12 years fails. JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of this litigation is a tank which, it is conceded, was excavated by the defendants' predecessors very many years ago. It is further conceded that the plaintiff has received no rent in respect of this tank, and that in fact no rent has ever been paid by the defendant who claims in this suit that it is his rent-free land. He has succeeded in both the lower Courts in establishing the plea of limitation. The facts which are conceded appear to me to support that plea. It was argued that that this case is distinguishable from those with which we have already dealt, because the encroachment by which possession is said to have been obtained of this land on which the tank is situated, constituted the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant and that, therefore, the plea of limitation is not open to the defendant as being a tenant of the plaintiff. But, in my opinion, there is an error in this argument. What we have to see is whether this encroachment was considered as annexed to the holding. Now, that has not been the plaintiff's case and this argument has been advanced before us with some ingenuity at the last moment to escape from the plea of limitation. As I read the plaint and all proceedings in this suit, it was not suggested that this tank was a part of the holding. If it was not a part of the holding, then that doctrine which would entitle the landlord to say that there is presumption that the encroachment is for his benefit has no application. In fact we find that the facts are as I have already indicated, and it is established that more than 15 years before suit there was a direct assertion of title negating the theory of encroachment which would have conferred upon this tank the character of an addition to the original holding. In the circumstances, I think, the endeavour to escape from the plea of limitation based on adverse possession for more than 12 years has failed, and we must confirm the decree with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 46 (3), 47—Dismissal of application on the ground of fraud, meaning of—Appeal—Revision.

Under section 47 a Court can dismiss an insolvency petition if satisfied that its presentation was an abuse of the process of the Court, i. e., that the petition was presented in order to perpetrate a fraud but not if the fraud is already committed.

Where the leave required under section 46 (3) is not obtained from the District Court, the Appellate Court may treat the appeal as revision under powers given by section 47 (2).

Mr. Palit, for the Appellant.

Mr. Po Han, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant presented a petition in insolvency which was rejected by the District Judge on the ground apparently that he did not believe that the appellant's crops were destroyed or that the cost of cultivation was as high as the appellant stated, and also on the ground that the petition was made in order to swindle one Po Kyin, who stated that the appellant had sold 12 bullocks to him, had received the payment for them and had then fraudulently disposed of the cattle to his, the appellant's son. The petition was apparently dismissed both under section 15 and section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but under section 15 the Court could only dismiss the petition if it was satisfied that the petitioner had not right to present the petition under section 6, and that has not been found. Under section 47 the Court would have the power to reject the petition if it was satisfied that its presentation was an abuse of the process of the Court, i. e., that the petition was presented in order to perpetrate a fraud. Apparently that was one of the grounds upon which the petition was rejected; but the facts as disclosed would not lead to any inference that the petition was presented in order to perpetrate a fraud. The fraud, if any, had already been committed and the insolvency proceedings could not in any way prevent Po Kyin from recovering any compensation that he might be entitled to. It is urged that for an appeal from an order made under section 47 the leave of the Court must first be obtained under section 46 (3) of the Act. In so far as this may be an appeal made under section 47 we can treat it as an application in revision; and we have that power under section 47, sub-section 2, of the Act.

We set aside the order dismissing the petition and direct that the matter be remanded to the District Court and disposed of according to law. The appellant will have his costs, two gold mohurs.

Order set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 106—Order of Settlement Officer in Survey and Record of Rights—Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Res judicata—Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act (III of 1898), s. 9, effect of—Claim of rent-free—Jurisdiction of Settlement Officer.

The order of a Settlement Officer in the Survey and Record of Rights under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 as originally passed, is a decree within the terms of section 9 of Act III (B. C.) of 1898 and will operate as res judicata in respect of points considered and decided. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Section 9 of the amending Act III of 1898 clearly shows that the amendment of section 106 does not apply to the order of a Settlement Officer in the Survey and Record of Rights. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Where a claim of rent-free has been made before a Settlement Officer it is his duty to find whether rent at any time has been paid for the land in dispute and the mere fact that the claim has been made does not deprive him of jurisdiction. [p. 944, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated the 22nd December 1899, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Comilla, dated the 30th May 1898.

Moulvi Syed Shamsul Huda, for the Appellants.

Babu Gobinda Chunder Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the view expressed by the District Judge is correct. The Raja of Tipperah applied for the settlement of fair rent on certain lands, and the present plaintiffs, as tenants, admitted that they held certain lands liable to assessment; but they contended before the Settlement Officer that other lands claimed by the Raja as forming portions of his holding or taluk were held by them rent free, and were, therefore, not liable to assessment. On objections so taken, the Settlement Officer found that the rent of these other lands forming portions of the taluk had, on three previous occasions, been settled by the Revenue Officer and that, consequently, rents had been paid for them. Such a finding necessarily means that the objection taken that the lands were held rent free was without any substance. The tenants have now brought this suit to have it declared that the lands were rent free and not liable to assessment.

The question arises, and the case has been so dealt with in the lower Court on appeal, whether the suit is barred as res judicata within the terms of section 13, Civil Procedure Code. In the first place, it is clear that, within the terms of section 9 of Act III (B. C.) of 1898, the order of the Settlement Officer in the Survey and Record of Rights under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 as originally passed was a decree, and inasmuch as it was not appealed against, it was final, and there can be little doubt, having regard to the terms of the judgment delivered by that Settlement Officer, that the point now raised was considered and decided.

The learned Pleader, who appears for the appellants, first of all claims the right of suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 as amended by Act III (B. C.) of 1898. But it is clear from the terms of section 9 of the amending Act of 1898, which has been already referred to, that this amendment of section 106 does not apply to the order of the Settlement Officer.

The learned Pleader next contends that, however that may be, the present suit is not barred, inasmuch as the order of the Settlement Officer was without jurisdiction. Now, the Settlement Officer had, in the case before him, to find whether the plaintiffs were tenants of the Raja within the terms of the definition given in the Bengal Tenancy Act. Undoubtedly, in respect of certain lands they were tenants, but they objected to the assessment of the lands which form the subject of the present suit on the ground that they held under a rent-free grant. The mere fact that they had taken this objection did not deprive the Settlement Officer of jurisdiction. It was the duty of the Settlement Officer to find whether any rent had been at any time paid for these lands so as to show that the claim of rent free was without foundation. Unless it could be so, it would be impossible for any Settlement Officer to proceed if an objection can, though such objection be manifestly groundless, be taken and it is clear from his proceedings that the Settlement Officer did consider these points and he did hold that in the three previous Settlements

U. P. Court of Wards Act (III of 1899), ss. 16, 18, 20, applicability of—Mortgagee not notifying his mortgage—Suit on mortgage, if maintainable—Mortgage, if admissible in evidence—Interest after date of notification, if allowable.

Section 20 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1899, applies only to the case of persons who have notified their claims under the provisions of section 16 of the Act but have failed to produce their documents. [p. 945, col. 2.]

Therefore, a mortgagee, who did not notify his claim under section 16 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1899, is entitled to maintain a suit on his mortgage and his mortgage is admissible in evidence, but he will not be allowed interest under section 18 of the Act. [p. 946 col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor (with him the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Mr. S. K. Dar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of two mortgages, the first, dated the 7th of August 1907, for Rs. 6,500 and the second, dated the 11th of February 1909, for Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff claims Rs. 10,794 on foot of the two mortgages. The estate of the mortgagors was taken over by the Court of Wards and a notification was duly issued, with effect from the 29th of July 1911, under section 16 of the Court of Wards Act, III of 1899. The mortgagees did not, in compliance with the provisions of section 16, notify their claim under the two mortgages against the estate. It appears that there was some notification of one of the mortgages in October 1912. This, however, may, for the purposes of our judgment, be disregarded. The estate is not now and was not at the time of the institution of this suit under the management of the Court of Wards. The management was given up in November 1912. The Court below has given the plaintiffs a decree for the full amount of the claim.

In appeal it is contended that the plaintiffs having failed to produce their documents before the Collector, the same are inadmissible in evidence, having regard to the provisions of section 20. Of course if the plaintiffs are unable to adduce their mortgage-deeds in evidence, they cannot sustain their suit. On the other hand, it is contended that section 20 only applies to the case of persons who have notified their claims under the provisions of section 16 but have failed to produce their documents. It seems to us that the latter contention is clearly correct. Section 17 of the Act provides that notwithstanding the provisions of the section any person who has a claim, whether it be allowed or disallowed by the Court of Wards, is entitled to institute a suit, and that notwithstanding that the claim has not been notified. It may possibly be said that this provision only applies to the matters mentioned in the earlier part of the same section.

But section 18 makes the matter abundantly clear. In section 18 the penalties for not notifying a claim are set forth. Interest is to cease to run from the date upon which the claim should be notified. Clause (2) provides that all claims not notified are postponed to all claims that have been notified. If section 20 applied to cases where there had been no notification, it would, practically speaking, amount to an enactment that no suit could be brought where a claim had not been notified. If no claim had been notified no documents would be produced. But the words of section 20 themselves show that it only deals with cases where there has been a notification under section 16. The new Act, which was not in force at the time the estate was taken over by the Court of

BIRENDRA KISORE MANIKYA v. ANANDAPRIYA BAISHANABI.

Wards, has laid down entirely new penalties for the failure to notify. Section 18 provides as follows: "Subject to the provisions of section 20, every claim of the nature specified in section 17 against the ward or his property, other than debts due to or liabilities incurred in favour of the Government, which is not notified under section 17, shall be deemed, for all purposes and on all occasions, whether during the continuance of the superintendence of the Court of Wards or afterwards, to have been duly discharged." On behalf of the appellants the case of Collector of Ghazipur v. Balbhaddar Singh (1) is relied upon. At page 29 of the judgment there is the following passage: "It was suggested that the obligation to produce documents is laid upon creditors who notify their claims. The argument is that a creditor who does not notify his claim at all may make himself liable to the provisions of section 18 already quoted, but cannot be held liable to the further disability laid down by section 20. There is nothing in the wording of the Act to support this contention, indeed it appears contrary to the clear intention of the provisions under consideration." We cannot agree with these remarks. It seems to us that the wording of the Act shows that the contention is correct.

The only question which remains is the question of the amount of interest allowed. This is a point which is not taken in the memorandum of appeal. We think, however, that we ought to give effect to the clear provisions of section 18. This provides that every claim, save as in the section mentioned, shall cease to bear interest from the date of the expiry of the period prescribed by this section. It is true that one of these mortgages was not payable for a period of five years. It was, however, nevertheless a "claim" against the estate, and we think that under the provisions of the section it ceased to bear interest from the 29th of January 1912, that is to say, six months after the notification. At the same time we think that the plaintiffs ought to have their costs proportionate to their success in both Courts, the point not having been taken in the memorandum of appeal to this Court.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 25; 10 A. L. J. 234 at p. 242.

We accordingly vary the decree of the Court below by directing that interest shall be disallowed on both mortgages from the 29th of January 1912 upto the date of the institution of the present suit. From that date the plaintiffs will have simple interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of payment. We extend the time for redemption for a period of six months from this date.

Decree varied.

Limitation—Adverse possession—Plaintiff treating defendant as trespasser—Claim for rent.

Where the plaintiff takes his stand upon the position that the defendant is a trespasser and he does not elect to treat him as a tenant, the question arises whether the plaintiff has been in possession within 12 years. If it is found that he has not been in possession his claim for assessment will be dismissed as barred by time. [p. 947, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, first Court of Tipperah, dated the 28th April 1910, reversing that of the Munsif, fourth Court at Comilla, dated the 31st May 1909.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Gobind Chunder Dey Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the Maharaja of Tipperah in a suit commenced by him for assessment of rent in respect of the disputed land against the representatives of one Durga Charan Chakrabarti. In 1894 the land was in the occupation of occupancy raiyats and when proceedings were taken under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act they appeared before the Settlement Authorities and stated that they held under Durga Charan, who himself was a rent-free holder. On the 21st August 1896 the Settlement Record was prepared with an entry to the effect that the Maharaja was the zemindar, Durga Charan was an intermediate holder and the occupancy rai-yats held under the latter. On the 11th April 1908 the present action was commenced for assessment of rent. The defendants pleaded that the land was not liable to be assessed with rent, and that in any event the claim for assessment was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance overruled these contentions and assessed rent. Upon appeal the learned Judge has held that the land is liable to be assessed with rent, but he has dismissed the claim on the ground that it is barred by limitation.

It has been contended in the present appeal that the view taken by the Judge cannot be supported. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the claim of the plaintiff is barred because in 1894 an adverse title was set up on behalf of Durga Charan by the tenants. It has been argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that this could not operate as adverse possession in favour of Durga Charan against the zemindar. In our opinion, there is considerable force in this contention. But it is clear that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed on a different ground. As has been pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent, the plaintiff repudiates the entry in the Settlement Records. In fact he has not produced in evidence the sheet which contains the entry about Durga Charan and he states expressly that he denies that Durga Charan held any tenure at all. The reason is that if it is admitted that Durga Charan was a tenure-holder the question would arise, why he never paid any rent and non-payment of rent might go to indicate that the holding was a rent-free grant. The plaintiff, therefore, takes his stand upon the position that Durga Charan is a trespasser and he does not elect to treat him as a tenant on receipt of rent from him. The question, therefore, arises whether the plaintiff has been in possession within 12 years. Upon the facts found it is clear that he has not been in possession within 12 years. The result is that his claim for assessment is barred by limitation.

The decree of the Court below is, therefore, affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption—Proof—Custom.

In a suit for pre-emption based upon custom it lies upon the plaintiff not merely to prove the existence of some custom of pre-emption but to prove the existence of a custom under which he himself has a right to pre-empt. [p. 948, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Budaun.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Ibn Ahmad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The Court below has dismissed the claim. The plaintiff adduced as evidence of the existence of the custom, an extract from the wajib-ul-arz of 1865. The Court below has considered the history of the village. It has also considered the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. The language used in the wajib-ul-arz coupled with the history of the village strongly suggests that what was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1865 was not an existing custom but an arrangement between the co-sharers. We are not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the Court below that a custom of pre-emption has not been proved in the present case. There is, however, another matter which we think is fatal to the plaintiff's claim. Since the wajib-ul-arz of 1865 perfect partition has taken place in the village and the plaintiff was not at the time of the sale a co-sharer with the vendor. His property was situate in a separate mahal. There was no joint and several responsibility between the plaintiff and the vendor for the payment of the Government revenue assessed upon their respective properties. Neither had any voice in the management or share in the enjoyment of the other's zemindari. It lay upon the plaintiff in the present case not merely to prove the existence of some custom of pre-emption, he had to prove the existence of a custom under which he himself had a right, that is to say, he had to prove the existence of a custom which gave a right to a person who was not a co-sharer with the vendor. The great importance in pre-emption cases of the co-parcenary relationship has been pointed out in the case of Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh (1), and also in the case of Ganga Singh v. Chedi Lal (2). The only evidence of the existence of a custom in the present case was the extract from the wajib-ul-arz to which we have referred. But that record clearly relates to a right between co-sharers because at that date partition had not taken place and all the proprietors in the village were co-sharers with each other. We are not deciding that the custom (assuming that there was one) ceased as the result of partition. The custom continues, but the plaintiff not being a co-sharer with the vendor is no longer within the custom. We think that the plaintiff gave no evidence of the existence of a custom which gave a person who was not a co-sharer with the vendor a right of pre-emption. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must fail. Both the lower Courts have held the suit to be barred by adverse possession. But Mr. Sinha, on behalf of the plaintiff, has sought to escape from that by suggesting that the plaintiff and the defendants were respectively landlord and tenants, so that the bar of limitation could not apply. But the foundation of his argument fails. The plaint clearly proceeds upon the assumption that there was not that relationship of landlord and tenant. This is the view also advanced in the written statement, and the evidence that has been brought to our notice shows that even at the trial the case was that the defendants were in possession not as tenants, but wrongfully and without any right. The Munsif found definitely and clearly that the defendants were not the Maharaja's tenants. The finding of the District Judge is not clear on this point, but he was of opinion with the learned Munsif that the appellant was aware of the adverse title claimed by the defendants. As I understand the facts found, they come to this. The defendants have been in possession for more than 12 years and they have been in possession on their own account, though they claim no more than a rent-free title. Their possession in the circumstances would be adverse to that extent and would furnish an answer to this suit.

Pre-emption—Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act (II of 1903), s. 3—Sanction by Collector to bring suit for pre-emption, when required.

There is no provision in the Land Alienation Act, which entitles an intending pre-emptor to get the sanction of the Collector to bring a suit for pre-emption. The sanction contemplated in section 3 of the Act applies to a voluntary transfer.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Allahabad.

Messrs. Durga Charan Banerji and Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff pre-emptor has been found by both the Courts to be a person who was not entitled to purchase the property in question having regard to section 3 of the Land Alienation Act, II of 1903, inasmuch as he was not a member of an agricultural tribe. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit on this ground. The lower Appellate Court seems to have considered that the Court might make a decree in the plaintiff's favour subject to the consent of the Collector to be subsequently obtained, and remanded the case. We think the view taken by the learned District Judge was not correct. The plaintiff's alleged cause of action was the fact that the vendor, being bound by a custom of pre-emption to first offer the property to the plaintiff, did not do so. We think that the Act, which provides that the property should not be sold to the pre-emptor, entirely absolved the vendor from any obligation to first offer the property to the pre-emptor. It is said that the subsequent sanction of the Collector might smooth over all these difficulties. It seems to us that the Court's jurisdiction was either to grant a decree for pre-emption or not to do so. It would be obviously open to many objections that the sale of the property should be kept in abeyance until such time the Collector sanctions or refuses to sanction the sale. We may also point out that it is extremely doubtful whether the Collector could give any such sanction to a pre-emptor. There is no provision in the Act which entitles an intending pre-emptor to get the sanction of the Collector to bring a suit for pre-emption. If the sanction of the Collector could not be obtained before the bringing of the suit, it seems a fortiori that he could not grant the sanction subsequently. The sanction contemplated in section 3 is clearly in the case of a voluntary transfer. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Possession, suit for, based on trespass alone—Alternative relief for assessment of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 157 bearing of, on question of limitation.

In a suit for possession after establishment of title or in the alternative for assessment of rent, the plaint, written statements, and issues in the case showed that the suit was based on trespass and on trespass only.

Held, that the mere fact that there was an alternative claim for rent would not make any difference on the question of limitation, because that claim was based on section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

FAKEERAPPA v. THIPPANNA.

JUDGMENT.—It was conceded at the outset by Mr. Sinha in this case that if this suit was to be treated as one based on trespass then it must fail, as it would clearly be barred. We have read through the plaint, written statements, and issues in this case, and it seems to me to be clear that the suit was based on trespass and on trespass only. The mere fact that there was an alternative claim for rent does not disturb that view, because that claim was based on section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; on the contrary, this, if anything, goes to confirm the view that the suit was one of trespass.

In this view, we must confirm the decree with costs.

Where the local custom of the trade was that lawful possession as pledgees of a railway receipt entitled the holder of that receipt to get possession of the goods from the carrier and to retain the goods as security for the moneys advanced on pledge of the railway receipt:

Held, that the custom really created a charge on the goods themselves in the possession of the carrier and as soon as the pledge was made the insolvent's right to get delivery from the Railway Company ceased. The goods were no longer in the eye of the law in "the possession, order or disposition of the insolvent" within the meaning of clause (3) of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as against the right of the pledgee to get possession of the goods and sell the same for reimbursing the advances made by him. Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Bellary, in Insolvency Applications Nos. 388 and 389 of 1908, in Insolvency Petitions Nos. 9, 10 and 11 of 1908.

FACTS.—One Bhimaji carrying a business in grain, cotton, etc., endorsed and delivered to M. Thippanna on 7th December 1908 railway goods receipts Nos. 6506 and 6520 and invoices Nos. 67 and 70 for 294 bags of grain with an order to receive and sell the goods on commission. On the security of the goods, Thippanna advanced Rs. 2,000 to Bhimaji in accordance with the local custom. Bhimaji closed shop on the 8th but Thippanna did not hear anything about his bankruptcy till the morning of the 9th.

Bhimaji's creditors having put in an application for having him declared an insolvent, Thippanna put in a petition claiming that the goods covered by the above-mentioned railway receipts were not liable to seizure. Thippanna's claim was allowed by the District Judge and the creditors appealed.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar and the Hon'ble Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the learned District Judge's finding, that the first respondent obtained the railway receipt as security for an advance bona fide made by the first respondent on the 7th December 1908, is fully supported by the evidence, especially the accounts of the insolvent firm and of the first respondent.

Amarchand & Co. v. Ramdas (1) decides that a railway receipt is a mercantile document of title to goods; and it is proved that by the custom of the trade in Bellary lawful possession as pledgee of a railway receipt entitles the holder of that receipt to get possession of the goods from the carrier and to retain the goods as security for the moneys advanced on pledge of the railway receipt. This custom really creates a charge at once on the goods themselves in the possession of the carrier and that charge ripens into a pledge of the goods themselves when the holder of the railway receipt gets possession of the goods in due course. As regards section 16, clause (3), of the Provincial Insolvency Act, as soon as the pledge of the railway receipt was made to the first respondent, the insolvent's right to get delivery from the Railway Company ceased (see section 137 of Act IV of 1882); the goods were no longer in the eye of the law in "the possession, order or disposition of the insolvent" within the meaning of clause (3) of section 16 as against the right of the first respondent to get possession of the goods and to sell the same for and reimbursing the advances made by him. Further, section 16, clause (3), is directed against "the true owner" who negligently allows the insolvent to retain goods in the insolvent's possession, order or disposition as the reputed owner. In the present case, the first respondent is admittedly not the true owner of the same, and he did not allow the insolvent to retain any goods as reputed owner thereof.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. As the first respondent has incurred unnecessary expenses in printing, the whole of the entries found in pages 22 to 42 of the documents instead of only a few of the entries in page 27, the first respondent will himself bear the costs incurred in printing pages 22 to 26 and 28 to 42.

For similar reasons the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 234 of 1911 is dismissed with costs.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellants.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are as follows:—Rahim Ali Khan, one of the defendants-respondents, was the owner of $7\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in village Dastara. On the 5th of December 1902 he executed a sale-deed in respect of six biswas out of the $7\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in lieu of Rs. 14,000 in favour of Abdul Hakim Khan and his three minor sons. Out of the consideration money the sum of Rs. 12,000 was left with the vendees for the discharge of two prior mortgages, namely, Rs. 6,000, were to be paid on account of a usufructuary mortgage to the credit of Har Bhajan Lal and others, mortgagees, and Rs. 2,924-5 were to be paid to one Lala Sant Lal for a simple mortgage. It was further agreed that any balance left over, after payment to the two prior mortgagees, will be repaid to the vendor; the payments to the two prior mortgagees were to be made at stated times which were mentioned in the sale-deed. The prior mortgagees were admittedly not paid on the date mentioned in the sale-deed. On the 12th of September 1912 Rahim Ali Khan executed a deed of assignment in favour of Karan Singh and Ahmad Ali Khan in respect of the money due from the vendees, that is, the balance of the purchase-money and damages on account of non-payment of the prior mortgages on the dates mentioned in the sale-deed. On the 9th of January 1913 Karam Singh and Ahmad Ali Khan, the assignees, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the recovery of Rs. 9,000, the amount said to be due on account of damages and the balance of purchase-money. The claim was brought against the vendees and against Rahim Ali Khan and others. The claim was resisted on various pleas, one of which was that it was barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the suit was filed, decreed it in part. The vendees have preferred the present appeal.

They challenge the decree against them on the ground, among others, that the suit is not maintainable in view of the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The argument is based on the allegation that on the 11th of September 1905 Rahim Ali Khan brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh for the cancellation of the deed of the 15th of December 1902 against the appellants, on the allegation that the latter had failed to carry out their part of the contract by not paying the prior mortgages and not paying him the balance of the purchase-money. The said claim was dismissed on the ground that the remedy sought by Rahim Ali Khan was not open to him, as the non-payment of sale price or the non-fulfilment of some of the terms of the contract of sale did not entitle the vendor to ask for cancellation of the sale. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the cause of action alleged in the suit of the 11th of September 1905 was the same as the cause of action stated in the present suit, namely, the breach of contract by the appellants. It was open to Rahim Ali Khan in the former suit to sue for damages and the return of the unpaid sale price and that his omission to do so bars the present suit under Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of this contention the learned Counsel for the appellants relies on the wording of the said provisions of law and on the following cases :—Rangayya Goundan v. Naniappa Rao (1), Budri Bisal v. Musammat (1) 24 M. 491; 3 Bom. L. R. 299; 6 C. W. N. 17; 28 J. A. 221 (P. C.).

Lalta Koer (2), Raja Bahadur Shiv Lal Moti Lal v. Rajee Vappa Pampanna (3). For the respondents the reply is that the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to the present case inasmuch as the remedy sought by Rahim Ali Khan in his former suit was misconceived and could not be granted to him. It is said that where a plaintiff sues for a relief that he is not entitled to, a subsequent suit by him for the right relief on the same cause of action is not barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of his contention the learned Counsel for the respondents has relied on the following cases: Piari v. Khiali Ram (4), Darbo v. Kesho Rai (5), Sarsuti v. Kunj Behari Lal (6), Mohan Lal v. Bilas (7), Bandey Ali v. Gokul Misir (8), Musammat Prab Devi v. Harkishn Das (9), Musammat Parmeshri v. Vasdeo (10).

The strongest cases for the respondents are those reported in Piari v. Khiali Ram (4) and Musammat Parmeshri v. Vasdeo (10). If it be conceded that the proposition of law laid down in the said two cases is correct, it does not help the respondents in the present case, for it was laid down in those cases that where a plaintiff has asked for a wrong relief presumably under a misapprehension of what relief he is entitled to seek, his subsequent suit for the right relief is not barred. In the present case we find on reference to the plaint of the suit of the 11th of September 1905 that Rahim Ali Khan knew perfectly well that he was then entitled to claim both the damages and the balance of sale-price. In fact he stated in paragraph 9 of his plaint that he was entitled to recover damages and the balance of unpaid price from the defendants of the suit as well as ask for the cancellation of the sale-deed, but he was for the present asking merely for the cancellation of the sale and that he would subsequently sue in respect of the other reliefs. The cases relied upon by the learned Counsel for the respondents do not go the length of saying that in a case like the present, where Rahim Ali Khan knew perfectly well what relief he was entitled to and he deliberately omitted to claim the right relief, his subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action for the right relief does not stand barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2. It is clear that Rahim Ali Khan was entitled to more than one relief on his own statement in the plaint of 1905. He deliberately chose to sue in respect of one and omitted to sue in respect of the others and he did not obtain the leave of the Court in respect of the reliefs which he had omitted. The present claim, therefore, stands clearly barred under Order II, rule 2, as the cause of action in the two suits is exactly the same.

The appeal, therefore, prevails and we allow it. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the claim of the plaintiffs is dismissed with costs in both Courts. The objections filed by the plaintiffs as regards the amount disallowed by the Court below are also dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

The words "every settlement of rent or decision of a dispute by a Revenue Officer" in section 9 of Act III of 1898 (B. [p. 954, col. 1.]

Before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1893, a Settlement Officer was incompetent to decide the question of rent-free title, and, therefore, such a decision given before but embodied in the record published subsequently to the enforcement of the amending Act, will not operate as res judicata between the parties in a suit for assessment of rent of the same lands brought afterwards in a Civil Court. [p. 954, col. 2; p. 955, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, dated the 29th November 1910, reversing that of the Munsif of Tipperah, dated the 31st November 1909.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Birendra Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for assessment of rent of land which, the defendants contend, they hold under a rent-free title. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. Upon appeal, the District Judge has reversed that decision, and has held, first, that the decision of the question by the Settlement Officer does not conclude the matter in controversy, and, secondly, that from the long and uninterrupted possession of the defendants without payment of rent to the plaintiff or his predecessor, the inference may legitimately be drawn that the original grant was rent free. On the present appeal, the validity of the conclusion of the District Judge upon the second aspect of the case has not been disputed; but it has been argued that the decision of the Settlement Officer, which was adverse to the defendants, operates as res judicata, and that it was not open to the District Judge to come to an independent determination on the merits.

From an examination of the record, it transpires that on the 17th April 1897 the Settlement Officer decided, in the course of a proceeding under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the present defendants had failed to establish before him their alleged rent-free title. On the basis of this decision of the dispute between the parties, the rent was subsequently settled and the record was finally published on the 1st December 1898. The appellant now contends, with reference to sub-section 1 of section 9 of Act III of 1898 (B. C.), which came into force on the 2nd November 1898, that the decision of the Revenue Officer, though prior in point of time, was embodied in a Record of Rights published afterwards and precludes an investigation of the matter by the Civil Court.

Sub-section (1) of section 9 is in these terms: "Every settlement of rent or decision of a dispute by a Revenue Officer under section 104 or section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, before the commencement of this Act, in respect of which no appeal has, before the commencement of this Act, been preferred to the Special Judge appointed under section 103 of the Act, shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and shall be binding." The appellant argues that there was a decision of a dispute by a Revenue Officer under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and that such decision has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and is final. This contention is based upon a superficial view of the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 9. It was ruled by this Court in the case of Radha Kishore Manikya v. Durganath Bhattacharjee (1) that the words "every settlement of rent or decision of a dispute by a Revenue Officer" in section 9 are applicable only to those cases which a Revenue Officer has jurisdiction to try and are not applicable to a decision of a Settlement Officer as to the validity of a lakheraj title under section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. This conclusion coincides with the decision of Donay Dass v. Keshub Pruhti (2), where Mr. Justice Ghose observed that the Legislature could not possibly have intended to accord finality to a decision of a dispute by a Settlement Officer which it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Revenue Officer to decide under section 106. This view is, in our opinion, eminently reasonable. Reliance, however, has been placed upon the later decision in Nabin Chandra Chakrabarti v. Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur (3) where the attention of the Court was not drawn to the cases of Donay Dass v. Keshub Pruhti (2) and Radha Kishore Manikya v. Durganath Bhattacharjee (1). There is a dictum in this judgment to the effect that the doctrine of res judicata applies, irrespective of the question whether the decision of the Revenue Officer was or was not competent under section 104 or 106. In support of this view reliance was placed upon the decision in Nikunja Behari Chanda v. Radha Kisore (4). On an examination of the judgment in that case, however, it transpires that the decision is not an authority for the proposition deduced therefrom. There it was held that the particular decision of the Revenue Officer was within his jurisdiction and if the decision was within his competence, it was plainly final between the parties under sub-section (1) of section 9 of Act III of 1898. We may further observe, with reference to the decision in Nabin Chandra Chakrabarti v. Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur (3), that although reliance was placed upon the doctrine of res judicata, the Court yet proceeded to determine the case on the merits and came to the conclusion that the claimants had failed to establish their alleged rent-free title on the basis of the sanads and the other documents produced by them. We hold accordingly that the appellant can succeed only if the decision of the Settlement Officer, dated the 17th April 1897, was a decision of a dispute which he was competent to decide under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before its amendment in 1898.

It cannot, we think, be seriously maintained that the Settlement Officer was competent to decide a question of this character before the amendment of the Statute in 1898. This is plainly indicated by the fact that section 102 has now been amended by the insertion of a new clause which expressly authorises the Settlement Officer to decide, when the land is claimed to be held rent free, whether or not rent is actually paid, and if not paid, whether or not the occupant is entitled to hold the land without payment of rent, and, if so entitled, under what authority. The very circumstance that the Legislature has inserted this clause in section 102 points to the conclusion that the matter provided for thereunder is not covered by the other clauses of section 102. This in fact was the view taken by a Full Bench of this Court in the cases of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Nitye Singh (5), and is also in accord with the decision in Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Gaber Ali Khan (6). But it has been argued that the decision of the Full Bench should be limited to cases where the Settlement Officer is invited to decide whether an alleged rent-free grant constitutes a valid title, and in support of this our attention has been drawn to isolated passages in the judgment delivered by the Full Bench. But we prefer to accept the interpretation of the decision of the Full Bench as given by Mr. Justice Prinsep who delivered the leading judgment in that case; his view will be found in the case of Rzdha Kishore Manikya v. Durganath Bhattacharjee (1), and was confirmed on appeal by a Bench of three Judges. Reference has also been made to the case of Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Das (7), but that decision, rightly interpreted, does not support the contention of the appellant. In fact, the question whether a lakheraj is valid or not, does not and cannot require consideration in a case of this description; the proceeding is, not by the Government for assessment of revenue on land alleged to be held revenue free, but is by the proprietor of an estate for assessment of rent on land claimed by the occupier to be held as rent free.

It has finally been urged that if this view be taken, it would be open to any occupier of land to defeat the proceeding before the Settlement Officer by an unfounded assertion, that the land was held rent-free. There is no ground for this apprehension, for, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Prinsep in Nikunja Behari Chanda v. Radha Kisore (4) it is open to the Settlement Officer to investigate whether rent has, as a matter of fact, been paid in respect of the disputed land; if it is proved that rent has been paid, the Settlement Officer is competent to assess fair and equitable rent on the land; if, on the other hand, it is proved that rent has never been paid in respect of the land, he cannot assess rent thereon, merely because he is of opinion that the alleged rent-free title has not been proved. This was the law under the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stood before its amendment in 1898. The law, however, was altered in 1898 and the controversy cannot be raised again. We hold accordingly that the decision of the Settlement Officer dated the 17th April 1897 does not operate as res judicata and that it was open to the District Judge to come to a determination of the matter in dispute on the evidence before him. That determination, as we have said, is not, and cannot be successfully assailed on the merits, as it accords with a long line of cases in this Court: Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Bhoirab Chandra Chakrabarti (8).

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Bond, slavery—Overwhelming interest—Public policy.

A bond which binds down the executant to daily attendance and manual labour until a certain sum is re-paid in a certain month and penalises default with overwhelming interest is opposed to public policy and is not enforceable. [p. 956, col. 2.]

FACTS.—The suit was on a harwahi bond printed as foot-note to the judgment. Further facts appear from the following extract from the letter of reference of the Munsif:—

“The case of the plaintiff is that the defendant left his service without paying the debt in the month of Jeth 1319. Hence this suit for the recovery of Rs. 13 principal and Rs. 22 as interest, total Rs. 35.

The defendant has not appeared to contest the suit and hence it has been heard ex parte. This is very probably due to the fact that he is too poor to contest the claim.

Bonds of this nature are very common in this sub-division and I am told that there is no agriculturist who has not taken such a bond from his labourers. It is very difficult for agricultural operations in this sub-division to go on smoothly without such bonds. But it is said that such bonds are really slavery bonds, and reference to such bonds, was made in a recent Administration Report of the Government of Bihar and Orissa. If these bonds are really slavery bonds they should be declared null and void by the Courts. But in my opinion these are not slavery bonds. The contract, though for indefinite period, is determinable by the labourer on payment of money secured by the bond. The labourer is moreover to get his customary wages from the employer so long as he serves him. No doubt the provision to pay exorbitant rate of interest is such as to deter the labourer from leaving the service. The abject and poor condition of majority of these labourers are such that they are never able to pay the money secured, unless there is another employer who pays him a higher value, out of which he may redeem himself. Under such a circumstance, the stipulation to pay an exorbitant rate of interest often serves as a check on him and prevents him from leaving the service. The result is that the same family of labourers goes on serving the same family of employer from generation to generation. But this is a circumstance which is not the result of the contract itself, but of extraneous circumstances. The provision to pay interest is really a penal provision which may be relieved against by the Court.

As I entertain reasonable doubt on the point of law involved in this case, I refer under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, for the decision of the Hon'ble High Court the following question:—

"Whether the bond in suit is a slavery bond? Are its terms enforceable?"

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Munsif of Banka, under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, for a decision whether a certain bond* is enforceable at law. It appears to us that it is not so enforceable. It binds down the executant to daily attendance and manual labour until a certain sum is re-paid in a certain month and penalises default with overwhelming interest. It is remarkable that the suit, which is brought on this bond, is not contested, and this, in the Munsif's opinion, is probably due to the fact that the executor is too poor to defend himself. Such a condition is indistinguishable from slavery, and such a contract is, in our opinion, opposed to public policy and not enforceable.

Reference answered.

In the year I wish to re-pay the money, I shall re-pay it in the month of Baisakh of that year in one lump sum, and then I will leave his work. I shall not re-pay money in any other month except the month of Baisakh. If I absent myself from work without re-paying the money, then I shall pay interest at the rate of Rs. 6-4 per cent. per mensem from the date of absence to the day of realization. I have, therefore, executed this harvahi (ploughman's) bond on the above conditions so that it may be of use, when required."

The omission of the words "in good faith" from Article 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908 does not entitle a person who purchases, with full knowledge that his vendor's title is merely that of a mortgagee, to the benefit of that Article. [p. 957, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to redeem a mortgage made in the year 1843. The facts are a little complicated, but it is unnecessary to state them in detail for the purpose of deciding the present

"I have borrowed Rs. 13 in cash from Ram Sarup Bhagat, inhabitant of Bandara, to meet my household expenditure. In satisfaction of interest, I shall daily remain in attendance, and plough the land of the said Bhagat, work with spade in his land, transplant his seedlings, thresh his crops by means of danni, etc., and shall perform and manage all works required from me. DIRGPAL SINGH v. KALLU.

appeal. It appears that in the years 1878 and 1879 persons in whom the mortgagee rights were then vested made transfers in favour of certain persons who are now represented by the appellants. In these transfers words are used descriptive of the interest transferred which would be appropriate if the transferor was absolute owner and not merely mortgagee. On the other hand, the words are not altogether inappropriate as descriptive of the right of a mortgagee in possession. The lower Appellate Court has found in concurrence with the Court of first instance that the actual interest which the transferors had at the date of the transfers was that of mortgagees in possession. It has also found (and given good reasons for its findings) that the transferees knew what the interest of the transferors was. After the transfer the name of the transferee was entered in the revenue papers as owner of the "mortgagee" interest. It is contended here that notwithstanding the findings of the Court below Article 134 of the Limitation Act bars the suit. Article 134 is as follows:—"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration." The period is twelve years from the date of the transfer.

It is admitted that a mortgagor has sixty years within which to bring a suit for redemption. It is also admitted that where the mortgagee transfers his mortgagee rights as such, the transferee stands in no better position than the transferor. It is, however, urged that if the words used in the deed of transfer are applicable to the transfer of an absolute interest, then Article 134 applies, no matter whether the transferee was aware of the nature of the interest of the transferor or not. We find great difficulty in accepting this contention. The main argument in favour of it is based on a comparison between the words of Article 134 in the recent Limitation Acts and Article 134 in Act IX of 1871. In that Act the Article was as follows:—"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards purchased from the trustee or mortgagee 'in good faith' and for value."

It is said that the absence of the words "in good faith" in the recent Acts shows the knowledge of the nature of the transferor's title is quite immaterial. Reliance is placed upon the case of Yesu Ramji Kalanath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (1). This case seems to have been considered in a later judgment of the same Court in the case of Pandu v. Vithu (2). We think that there is no reason for holding that the omission of the words "in good faith" from the recent Act entitled the person who purchased, with full knowledge that his vendor's title was merely that of mortgagee, to the benefit of Article 134. It may have been that the words were considered not altogether appropriate and that their retention would throw the onus on the transferee of proving that he had no knowledge of his vendor's title. This would be in many cases a hardship upon the person in possession of the property—he would have to prove a negative possibly after the lapse of many years. Whatever may be the reason for omitting the words, we cannot think that the Legislature intended that the mortgagee and his transferee should be able to shorten the period allowed by law for redeeming a mortgage by wilfully, and to the knowledge of both, misdescribing the interest transferred in the deed of transfer. In our opinion having regard to the findings of the Court below that the transferees from the mortgagees had actual knowledge that their vendors' title was merely that of a mortgagee and that they had no belief that they were purchasing an absolute interest, the decision of the Court below should be affirmed.

The only other point is a question of calculation. This is a matter which was not brought to the notice of the lower Appellate Court and we do not think it can be entertained here.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REFERENCE UNDER SECTION 5 OF THE COURT FEES ACT.

July 19, 1915.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt.
In the goods of G. A. QUININGBOROUGH,

DECEASED.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 11—‘Amount or value of the property,’ meaning of.

For the purposes of Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees Act, the expression “the amount or value of the property” signifies what is described as the net total in Annexure A in Schedule III, obtained by the deduction of the amount shown in Annexure B as not subject to duty from the gross valuation of the moveable and immoveable property left by the deceased. [p. 960, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case appear from the following Letter of Reference of the Taxing Officer:—

“This is an application by the Administrator-General of Bengal for Letters of Administration as in case of intestacy.

The applicant being the Administrator-General no affidavit of valuation, such as is required in the case of an ordinary applicant by section 19 (I) of the Court Fees Act, has been filed, but in his petition the Administrator-General has, in accordance with the practice, set out a list (Annexure A) of the assets of the estates and also a list (Annexure B) of the items not subject to duty.

From this it appears that the gross value of the estate as shown in Annexure A is over Rs. 1,000, viz., Rs. 1,244-11, the value of the items in Annexure B being Rs. 522. The net value of the assets, therefore, is below Rs. 1,000, viz., Rs. 722-11-0.

In paragraph 7 of this petition the Administrator-General submits that as the net assets of the estate are under Rs. 1,000 in value no duty is payable, and I have been asked as Taxing Officer to grant a certificate that no duty is payable, or in the event of my being of opinion that I cannot do that, to refer the point under section 5 of the Court Fees Act to the final decision of the Chief Justice.

A similar question came up before the Board of Revenue in 1904, who referred the matter to the then Advocate-General, Mr. O’Kinealy, for opinion. That officer was of opinion that in such cases duty was payable notwithstanding the fact that the deduction of the debts brought the value of the estate below Rs. 1,000. Thereafter the practice of the Court was in cases of this kind to charge duty upon the net value of the estate.

In 1913—In the goods of Harriett Teviot Kerr (1)—a question arose as to the rate of, and the proper method of calculating, the duty in an estate the gross value of which was Rs. 2,17,800 odd, the net value, after deduction of the items in Annexure B, being Rs. 18,000 only. The question arose in the course of correspondence between me as Registrar and the Collector of Stamp Revenue. I then submitted the correspondence with a note to Mr. Justice Fletcher, and as his Lordship was of opinion that Mr. O’Kinealy’s opinion above referred to was wrong, the Collector was informed that in future we should follow what had been our practice of deducting the amount of Annexure B from the amount of Annexure A and taking duty only on the difference when, and at the rate, payable on such difference—and that we should do this even in estates where the gross value was over, and the net under, Rs. 1,000.

The Collector subsequently drew attention to the then recent case of Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Debya (2) which was a case in which the gross value was Rs. 1985, the net value under Rs. 1,000 and it was there held that duty was payable.

No question, however, arose in that case as to the rate at which duty was to be charged on the net value, and as that was the principal point in Harriett Teviot Kerr’s case (1), I, at the request of the applicant, referred it under section 5 of the Court Fees Act.

His Lordship, the Chief Justice, appointed Mr. Justice Mookerjee to hear the reference. His Lordship’s decision will be found in In the goods of Harriett Teviot Kerr (1). When referring to the case of Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Debya (2) his Lordship on page 507 said:—“It is not necessary to decide on the present occasion whether this view (i.e., that an estate is not exempted from duty in a case where the gross value is over Rs. 1,000, and the net value under) is well founded. I reserve my opinion upon this matter with the remark that when it arises again it may require re-examination and further consideration." The point has come up on several occasions since then, and the office, considering itself bound by the ruling in Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Debya (2), has taken duty—the parties not having cared to take the matter further, the estate being so small.

In the present case, however, the Administrator-General, having regard to the judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Harriett Teviot Kerr's case (1) and to the fact that since that ruling the Revenue Authorities have been refunding, to him duty paid by him in cases where the net value of the assets was under Rs. 1,000, desires to be heard on the point and obtain a final decision. As the point in question is one of general importance, I, at the request of Messrs. Leslie & Hinds, Attorneys for the Administrator-General, refer it under section 5 of the Act to the final decision of His Lordship, the Chief Justice."

Mr. J. E. Bagram, for the Administrator-General.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, made by the Taxing Officer on the original side of this Court. The circumstances under which the reference has been made are lucidly stated in the order of reference and need only be narrated here very concisely.

An application has been made by the Administrator-General for Letters of Administration in respect of the estate of G. A. Quiningborough as in a case of intestacy. As the application has been made by the Administrator-General, no affidavit of valuation, such as is required in the case of an ordinary application under section 19H of the Court Fees Act, has been filed. But, in accordance with established practice, the Administrator-General has set out in his petition a list of the estate, and in another list the debts payable out of the estate. The value of the estate in the first list is given as Rs. 1,244-11-0, and the amount of the debts in the second list at Rs. 522, leaving a balance of Rs. 722-11. The question for determination is, whether the fee mentioned in Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees

Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees Act provides for the payment of a fee on a Probate of a Will or Letters of Administration, with or without Will annexed, when the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant of Probate or Letters is made exceeds Rs. 1,000. The question thus arises as to the true import of the expression "amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant of Probate or Letters is made" does it mean the gross value of the property or does it signify the net value obtained by the deduction of the debts and expenses from the gross value. Sir Richard Couch, C. J., held in the case of In the goods of Ram Chunder Doss (3) that in estimating the amount of the ad valorem fee chargeable under Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees Act, the fee must be paid in respect of the property without deducting the amount of the debts to be paid out of it. It cannot be reasonably disputed, I think, that this is a possible interpretation of Article 11 taken by itself. But since this decision was given in 1872, the Court Fees Act has been twice amended, first, by Act XI of 1899, and, next, by Act VII of 1910. In my opinion, a substantial alteration in the law has been effected by these amendments and Article 11 must now be interpreted in the light of section 19 I, which was inserted in the Court Fees Act by section 2 of Act XI of 1899. Sub-section 1 of section 19 I requires the applicant for Probate or Letters of Administration to file in the Court a valuation of the property in the form set forth in the third Schedule and to pay on such valuation the fee mentioned in Article 11. When we turn to the third Schedule, we find that the petitioner is required to state in the prescribed Form of Valuation that he has truly set forth in Annexure B all the items which he is by law allowed to deduct. Annexure A is a statement of the valuation of the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased. On the face of the Form of Valuation, it is thus patent that the petitioner is required to state the value of the property and is allowed to (3) 18 W.R. 153; 9 B. L. R. 30.

deduct the amount shown in Annexure B as not subject to duty. When we turn to Annexure B we find that it is headed "Schedule of debts, etc."; then follow five different items, as to each of which a statement of value has to be made. These are as follows: (1) amount of debts due and owing from the deceased, payable by law out of the estate; (2) amount of funeral expenses; (3) amount of mortgage encumbrances; (4) property held in trust not beneficially or with a general power to confer a beneficial interest; (5) other property not subject to duty. Three positions are now perfectly plain; first, that each of the first four items constitutes property not subject to duty and that consequently the fee cannot be culculated on the gross value of the estate as also on the debts and the difference taken; secondly, that unsecured debts are, for this purpose, placed on the same basis as mortgage encumbrances; thirdly, that the second paragraph of the Form of Valuation, read with the last clause of Annexure A and the first and last clauses of Annexure B, makes manifest the Legislative intent that the fee is payable, only on the difference between the gross value of the estate and the amount of debts, as such difference alone constitutes property subject to duty. This has admittedly been always the law with regard to mortgage-debts: In the goods of Peter Innes (4), In the goods of Charles Edward Maclean (5), In the goods of Ramchandra Lakshmanji (6); and I feel no doubt that this is the law also in respect of unsecured debts under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1899, whatever view might have been maintained before that date. The essence of the matter is that when an estate is burdened with the payment of debts, the market value of the property is the value of the estate left after deduction of the amount of the debts: Cooper v. Cooper (7); Blake v. Bayne (8). It is worthy of note that under the Law of England, in determining the value of an estate for the purpose of Estate Duty, allowance is made for debts and encumbrances (Finance Act 1894, Stat. 57 and 53 Vict. C. 30, section (7)). I am not unmindful that a contrary opinion was adopted in the case of Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Debya (2); but for reasons fully set out in my judgment in the case of In the goods of Harriett Teviot Kerr (1), I am unable to accept that view as a correct exposition of the true intent of the Legislature. That decision holds that the fee is to be paid on the net value of the property, but the liability for assessment is to be determined with regard to the gross value of the estate; in other words, the fee is first determined on the gross value and is then reduced by the fee calculated on the amount of debts. This cannot be right, for the debts, as already explained, are exempt from duty. I hold accordingly that for purposes of Article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees Act, the expression "the amount or value of the property" signifies what is described as the net total in Annexure A in Schedule III, obtained by the deduction of the amount shown in Annexure B as not subject to duty from the gross valuation of the moveable and immovable property left by the deceased. In this view fee cannot be levied in the case before me.

Mr. G. S. Lule, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this second appeal arises, owns a 5-annas 4-pies share in Mauza Fattepur in the Hinganghat Tahsil of the Wardha district and is lambardar of the whole village. The other co-sharers are his brother and one Waru Bai, each of whom like himself owns one-third. The defendant is Waru Bai. The plaint sets out that each year the accounts of the village show a debit against the defendant, because she holds sir and khudkasht land of which the assessed rental exceeds one-third of the total assessed rental for all such land. The claim relates to the Fasli years 1315—1320 (1905-06 to 1910-11 A. D.). A statement annexed to the plaint shows the receipts in each year to be Rs. 141, made up of Rs. 32 collected from tenants, Rs. 48 due for the defendant's sir and khudkasht and Rs. 61 for the rest of the sir and khudkasht. Another statement gives details of the annual expenses which may for present purposes be summarised thus:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
Land Revenue	...	80	0 0
Cesses	...	4	8 0
Lambardari hak	...	4	0 0
Miscellaneous	...	1	2 0
TOTAL	...	89	10 0

For 1317 and 1318 Fasli sums of Rs. 7-8-0 and Rs. 5 respectively are added as spent in connection with Settlement operations. The total receipts for six years were thus put at Rs. 846 and the total expenditure at Rs. 550-4-0, the resulting profits being Rs. 295-12-0, of which the defendant would be entitled to claim Rs. 98-9-4. Inasmuch, however, as the defendant never paid the assessed rental for her sir and khudkasht, aggregating Rs. 288, she was bound to pay the plaintiff Rs. 189-6-8. Including Rs. 62-5-0 for interest the total sum sought to be recovered was Rs. 251-11-8.

The first Court disallowed the miscellaneous expenses and those connected with Settlement operations and held the assessed rental on sir and khudkasht held by the defendant to be Rs. 45 only. Applying Article 99 of the Limitation Schedule to the facts, it dismissed the claim in respect of the Fasli years 1315, 1316 and 1317 as time-barred, the suit having been filed on the 18th September 1911. The plaintiff thus obtained a decree for Rs. 82-8-0 as principal and Rs. 23 as interest.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who treated the claim as virtually one for contribution towards the Government demand for land revenue and cesses, the expenditure under these heads being put in the plaint at Rs. 507 and the aggregate expenditure at Rs. 550-4-0 only. Remarking that if the assessed rental on sir and khudkasht be left out of account there were losses each year, the learned Judge pronounced the suit to be in effect one for contribution towards losses occasioned by rents collected from tenants falling short of the land revenue and cesses due to Government and, therefore, to be governed by Article 99. Failing that Article, he considered the general Article relating to suits for contribution, namely, No. 61, to be applicable. He also considered that the charge of Rs. 5 for Settlement operations in 1318 Fasli was proper and slightly modified the first Court's decree accordingly.

The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal and on his behalf it is contended that the suit is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Schedule, neither Article 61 nor Article 99 being applicable. In support of this contention two unreported decisions of this Court are cited, namely, Tanaba v. Gopika Bai (1) and Janardhan v. Mohna Bai (2). In the former the collections from tenants alone sufficed each year to cover all expenses, and the respondent's learned Pleader relies on this circumstance to distinguish that case from the present one. In both cases cited it was laid down on authority of the Privy Council in Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (3) that Article 120 should be applied, unless it is clear that the suit is within some other Article.

In my opinion the Courts below were not justified in ignoring items other than rental collections and Government demand when determining the character of the suit for purposes of limitation. The claim as laid in the plaint is certainly not one to recover money paid for the defendant. To use the words of Ismay, J. C., in Lachman Ram v. Munnalal (4), we have here a dispute arising on a division of the annual profits and what the lambardar has a right to ask for, is the balance which is due to him on an account, showing the extent to which a co-sharer is chargeable after taking into account the credit to which he is entitled in respect of his share in the estate. The pleadings taken all together clearly indicate that by arrangement between the parties no question of demanding a contribution from the defendant arises until the annual account is made up by the plaintiff. To apply either Article 61 or Article 99 would be in effect to depart from this arrangement; for in either case limitation would begin to run from the time the plaintiff paid more than his share of the land revenue, cesses or miscellaneous expenses, as the case may be. I would further observe that the item lambardari hak is one in respect of which the plaintiff has no payment to make: it is a due to be recovered from the defendant, and no question of contribution in respect of it alone can arise as between the parties to this litigation. Yet another fact which militates against acceptance of the view adopted by the lower Court is that the rents payable by tenants (Rs. 32) together with the rental (Rs. 61) assessed upon the sir and khudkasht held by the plaintiff and his brother more than suffice to meet land revenue, cesses and miscellaneous charges. Under the arrangement aforesaid it was the plaintiff's duty no less than the defendant's to pay the assessed rental on his share of the home-farm, and the expenses defrayed should, therefore, be regarded as paid from a common fund, not from the plaintiff's own pocket. Were the common fund completed as it should be each year, there would be profits to divide, and the present claim may thus be treated as representing profits which the plaintiff should have received as his own share.

For these reasons I hold that the suit is governed by Article 120, not by Article 61 or 99 of the Limitation Schedule. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be modified by adding what is due to the plaintiff for the Fasli years 1315, 1316 and 1317 and interest thereon. Costs in all three Courts will follow this result.

Appeal accepted.

A judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction pronounced against the only person or persons, who, at the time of such judgment, had any interest which would entitle them to resist the plaintiffs' title, is conclusive against all the world as to the facts stated in it and any person not a party to the suit in which it was pronounced but whose title is subsequent in origin, cannot question it on any of the grounds stated in it, except on the ground of its nullity for want of jurisdiction in the Court which pronounced it. Query.—Whether a suit for possession of an hereditary office on the death of a limited owner is governed by Article 124 or Article 141 of the Limitation Act? [p. 965, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, in Ordinary Suit No. 88 of 1911.

FACTS of the case appear clearly from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant:—(1) The dispute was about the genuineness of the Will and the decision in the previous suit is not res judicata, nor is that decision binding on the present appellant as he was no party to it. Peari Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (1), Ramnad Zamindar v. Dorasami (2), Goluck Monee Debia v. Ram Monee Bose (3), Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (4). (2) The appellant was in enjoyment of the emoluments of the office for the statutory period and he can claim title by prescription. Pydigantam Jagannadha Row v. Rama Doss Patnaik (5), Lilabati Misra v. Bishun Chobey (6).

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and C. S. Vencatachariur, for the Respondents:—The judgment was obtained against the only heir who had any right to question the genuineness of the Will, and is binding against all persons whose claim is subsequent in origin. Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (7), Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (8), Elliott Et. Al. v. The Lessee of Peirsol Et. Al. (9) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (10).

A third person like the present appellant cannot impeach the judgment or its legal efficacy.

There is nothing to show that the appellant was doing the duties of the office and mere possession of the manibham lands will not do to give him title by adverse possession. Kamalathammal v. Krishna Pillai (11), Bhaiaji Thakur v. Jharula Das (12).

This appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections coming on for hearing on the 16th, 17th, and the 18th August 1915, and having stood over for consideration till this day the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—The facts which gave rise to this appeal are as follows: A certain Chandrasekara Bhattar was entitled to certain manibham lands appertaining to the office of alankara miras in a temple in Madura. He died on the 3rd May 1881. He had no children, but he left a widow called Thalamuthammal: he also had a nephew called Rajah Bhattar, who succeeded him as alankara mirasdar and enjoyed the properties partly under a Will alleged to have been made by Chandrasekara Bhattar before he died and partly by an agreement with Thalamuthammal. Rajah Bhattar died on the 25th January 1882, leaving a widow Akilandammal. Questions arose between the two widows, but they were settled by agreement, and Thalamuthammal went into possession of the lands and remained in possession till her death in 1885. Meanwhile, the plaintiff who is found by the lower Court to be the nearest agnate of Rajah

SUPPA BHATTAR v. SUPPU SOKKAYYA BHATTAR.

Bhattar brought a suit, Original Suit No. 15 of 1882, to establish his reversionary rights, apparently considering those rights jeopardised by the arrangement between the ladies. He impleaded Akilandammal and Thalamuthammal as defendants together with Kuppa Bhattar, the present 4th defendant, and Deivasikamani Bhattar, the present 6th defendant, as heirs of Thalamuthammal who had died during the pendency of that suit. In that suit the defendants raised the plea among other matters that the alleged Will of Chandrasekara Bhattar was not genuine, because without the Will the chain of devolution to the plaintiff was broken on Chandrasekara's death. The suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff; and he obtained a declaration, as against the defendants he had impleaded, that he was entitled to succeed to the properties and the office on the death of Akilandammal. Akilandammal died some time in 1910, and as by this time the defendants were setting up claims to the office and its emoluments, the plaintiff brought the present proceedings against them to establish his right to the office. What happened to the office and who performed its duties during the first few years after Rajah Bhattar's death does not appear. But in August 1888 the Committee of the Devasthanam appointed the 1st and 2nd defendants to do the duties of the office (See Exhibits R and S). It is possible this was only giving sanction to an already existing arrangement. At a later date the 1st and 2nd defendants seem to have associated with themselves the 3rd and the 6th defendants in the discharge of the duties of the office.

The present suit came on for hearing in October 1912 and was decided in February 1913 in favour of the plaintiff. The 7th defendant appeals against the judgment. The plaintiff at the trial relied upon the prior judgment in Original Suit No. 15 of 1882 as debarring the defendants from re-opening the question of the genuineness of the Will of Chandrasekara Bhattar, and the learned Subordinate Judge so held, regarding the matter as governed by the doctrine of res judicata. His view was that, though the 7th defendant was not a party to the prior proceedings, yet as other reversioners who stood in the same right were impleaded, the fact that the 7th defendant was not a party did not prevent the judgment from being binding upon him. Whether on the supposed facts the decision would have been right may be open to question. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar cited a large number of cases to show that it was erroneous; but it is unnecessary to decide this matter, because on further examination in this Court it appeared clearly that the facts were not as the lower Court supposed them to be. At the time when judgment was given in Original Suit No. 15 of 1882 Thalamuthammal had died. The 3rd defendant in that suit, Kuppa Bhattar, the present 4th defendant, was a degree nearer the common ancestor than the present 7th defendant, and was, therefore, not a reversioner at all but the legal heir of Chandrasekara Bhattar; and the present 7th defendant was not even a reversioner and had no interest in the matter. The position then was this: the plaintiff had brought before the Court the legal heir of Chandrasekara Bhattar, to whom it was conceded the properties had originally belonged and through whom any title to them must ultimately be traced. Those proceedings definitely determined the issue as to the rightful succession to Chandrasekara as between the present plaintiff and Chandrasekara's nearest descendant. The question is, whether the present 7th defendant who at the date of that judgment had no interest in the properties and whose interest, if any, arose subsequently can be heard to challenge it. It is quite clear that the judgment is not binding on him either as a judgment in rem affecting status or as a determination of a matter where to he was a party or privy. But it is contended that the judgment formed a link in the plaintiff's title and that as such it cannot be challenged by any person who has not a claim prior in origin and paramount to the claim of Chandrasekara's heir. It is strange that in a matter of this importance there should be a complete absence of English authority. The principle contended for by the plaintiff has, however, often been recognized in American decisions and is expounded in two text-books of authority, Black on Judgments, Volume 2, section 607, and Bigelow on Estoppel (6th Edition), pages 50 and 167. It has also been recognised by a judgment of this Court in Sayam Ramamoorti Dhora v Secretary of State for India in Council (8). I guard myself from assenting to all the reasoning of that judgment; in particular I think the passages cited from Littleton and Lord Coke have no bearing on the present question and refer to what now-a-days would be called judgments in rem. But I assent to the principle of the judgment which I take to be this: that where a link in the chain of a party's title consists of a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction pronounced against the only person or persons who at the time of such decree had any interest which would entitle them to resist the plaintiff's title, no person whose claim is subsequent in origin can challenge that decree, or go behind it or challenge the plaintiff's title as at that date on any ground which was determined by that decree as a necessary step in its result. On this short ground I am of opinion that it is not open to the 7th defendant in these proceedings to maintain the invalidity of Chandrasekara's Will either as an imperfect testamentary instrument or as alienating properties which, by law, are inalienable.

In these circumstances, the plaintiff having established what I may call his paper title, the only plea open to the defendant is that of limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge decided that the Article of the Limitation Act which applied was Article 141. I will assume for the present purposes that the defendant is right in contending that the proper Article to apply is Article 124 in accordance with the decision in Pydigantam Jagannadha Row v. Rama Doss Patnaik (5). The question then arises, what kind of possession must have been enjoyed by the defendant to defeat the plaintiff's title? There is no doubt evidence to show that the 7th defendant has had possession of the lands attached to the office of alankara miras for more than the statutory period, and it is contended on his behalf that possession of the lands was sufficient without it being necessary to show that he performed the duties of the office. That view is contrary to the decision in Bhaiji Thakur v. Jharula Das (12). It is also contrary to at least one decision of this Court, Kamala-thammal v. Krishna Pillai (11). It is enough for me to say that I respectfully agree with those decisions and hold that possession of the lands alone will not suffice. There is no evidence at all in this case that the 7th defendant ever actually performed the duties of this office. But it is said there is evidence that the 6th defendant performed those duties, and as the 6th and 7th defendants were jointly entitled to a fourth share of Chandrasekara's original office, the 6th defendant's performance of its duties must be held to have been undertaken on behalf of himself and the 7th defendant also. All that I need say as to that is that there is no evidence that the 6th defendant believed himself or stated himself to be performing the duties on behalf of anybody except himself; there is not even any evidence that the 6th and 7th defendants were undivided brothers. In the absence of such evidence it would, in my opinion, be quite wrong to defeat the right of the true owner by straining legal doctrines of presumptive representation.

In my opinion, the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs to the first respondent to be taxed on one-eighth of the valuation of the memorandum of appeal, which is the share claimed by the only appellant.

I should like to add that the fact that I have referred in my judgment only to two or three of the very large number of cases cited in the arguments does not mean that I consider the citation of those cases to have been irrelevant. The fact is that the learned Subordinate Judge based his judgment on a number of untenable grounds, and it was only gradually in the course of the argument that it was possible to focus the discussion on to the two real questions.

With regard to the memorandum of objections filed by the 18th defendant, I see no reasonable ground for depriving him of costs on which a discretion could be judicially exercised to do so. His memorandum is, therefore, allowed with costs.

SRINIVASA Aiyangar, J.—Though the hearing of this appeal took some time, the questions which arise for decision are fairly simple and lie in a small compass.

Plaintiff sues to recover possession of

SUPPA BHATTAR v. SUPPU SOKKAYYA BHATTAR.

certain lands attached to an office in the Meenakshi temple at Madura. He claims to be the office holder. The office is a hereditary one and admittedly belonged to one Chandrasekara Bhattar. Plaintiff relies on a judgment in Original Suit No. 15 of 1882 on the file of the Subordinate Court, Madura, which finally established as against Chandrasekara Bhattar's heir, the present 4th defendant, the title of the plaintiff to succeed to the office as the heir of one Rajah Bhattar the devisee under the Will of Chandrasekara Bhattar after the death of Rajah Bhattar's widow who was then alive. The 7th defendant who is the only appellant here had admittedly no title on the date of that adjudication and all persons who could possibly be interested in the title to the office were parties to that adjudication. The judgment is relied on by the plaintiff as the final link in the chain of his title just in the same way as the plaintiff could have relied on a transfer of the property in his favour by the heir of Chandrasekara Bhattar. I have no doubt that for this purpose the judgment is relevant. As stated in Black on Judgments, Volume II, section 604, "for establishing the fact that such a verdict has been given, or such a judgment pronounced, and all the consequences of such a judgment, the judgment itself is invariably not only admissible as the proper legal evidence, but usually conclusive to prove that fact. The mere fact that such a judgment was given can never be considered as res inter alios acta, neither can the legal consequences of a judgment be so considered. But with reference to any fact upon whose supposed existence the judgment is founded, the proceeding may or may not be res inter alios, and consequently may or may not be evidence according to circumstances, considering the nature of the facts themselves and the parties," and in another place, Volume I, section 4, (page 10) it is stated that "another consequence flowing from the rendition of a judgment is that it may constitute either an evidence or a source of title." Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, who appeared for the appellant, did not seriously contest this position. He contends that, inasmuch as he was not a party to the previous adjudication he is entitled now to impeach the correctness of that judgment. I think he is not entitled to do that. Just as a transfer from the heir in favour of the plaintiff would have given the plaintiff a title to the property as against the whole world, so likewise the adjudication established the title of the plaintiff to the office in question as against all the world. I assume, of course, that the property was Chandrasekara's and all the persons who had any claim to his properties were parties to the previous litigation. On this question the decisions of this Court in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (7), Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (8) and in Second Appeal No. 574 of 1909 referred to therein are conclusive. The principle is clearly stated in the judgment just now delivered, and I respectfully agree. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar referred us to the case of Peari Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (1) as being an authority against this position; but that case is clearly distinguishable inasmuch as the title claimed by Durlavi was a title paramount to the title of the parties to the previous adjudications. The cases reported as Ramnad Zamindar v. Dorasami (2) and Goluck Monee Debia v. Ram Monee Bose (3) are also distinguishable. I am, therefore, of opinion that the 7th defendant is not entitled to question the correctness of the previous judgment; he would, however, be entitled to show that the previous judgment was a nullity just as he would be entitled to show that a conveyance by the heir of Chandrasekara Bhattar in favour of the plaintiff was void; but the grounds for declaring a judgment a nullity would obviously be different from the grounds on which a conveyance would be declared void. I think the only ground on which a judgment could be declared a nullity is an absolute want of jurisdiction in the Court over the parties or the subject-matter. "Where a Court has jurisdiction it has a right to decide every question which occurs in the cause; and whether its decision be correct or otherwise, its judgment, until reversed, is regarded as binding in every other Court. But, if it act without authority, its judgments and orders are regarded as nullities. They are not voidable, but simply void; and form no bar to a recovery sought, even prior to a reversal in opposition to them. They constitute no justification; and all persons concerned in executing such judgments of sentences are considered in law as trespassers." Elliott Et. Al. v. The Lessee of Peirsol Et. Al. (9), Mulkarjun v. Narhari (10). Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar contended that the previous judgment was void, because it established the validity of an alienation of a religious office which is against public policy, and in support of his position relied on the decision in Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (4). In that case the learned Judges held that a decree passed on a compromise ordering the sale of an office was void and the decree-holder was not entitled to execute the decree. The learned Judges held that the compromise decree was in no better position than an agreement of the parties, and they thought that as the agreement between the parties was void, the decree passed on such a compromise was equally void. With all respect to the learned Judges, I think they have ignored the operation of the decree as a decree. For certain purposes a compromise decree may be of the same nature as the agreement on which it is founded. Whether a particular act is legal or illegal may itself be a subject of compromise and a decree passed on such a compromise would not be void even though the agreement may be illegal [see the observations of the Judicial Committee in Great North-West Central Railway v. Charlebois (13). See also section 331, Black on Judgments, Volume I.] It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this matter further as in this case the judgment was rendered after trial. In this view it is unnecessary to discuss the question raised by the learned Vakil whether an alienation of a religious office is absolutely void and a custom of alienability should not be recognised by Courts, as such a custom is against public policy. The weight of authority, however, seems to be against the contention [see Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (14)].

The only other question which remains to be decided is whether the plaintiff's title to the office is extinguished by the adverse possession of the 7th defendant. Although the present suit is one for the recovery of immoveable property, still if the plaintiff had no subsisting title to the office, he could not recover the properties which are the emoluments of the office. If the 7th defendant was in adverse possession of the office for over 12 years prior to the suit, plaintiff's title would have been barred notwithstanding the fact that the widow of Rajah Bhattar was alive till 1910 [Pydigantam Jagannadhu Row v. Rama Doss Patnaik (5), Lilabati Misra v. Bishun Chobey (6)]. The 7th defendant who claims to have acquired a title by adverse possession has to prove that he took possession of the office adversely to the plaintiff. There is some evidence that he along with the other co-sharers was in enjoyment of the properties attached to the office, but that is not enough. He has to prove that he was performing the duties of the office [see Kamalathammal v. Krishna Pillai (11), Bhatiji Thakur v. Jharula Das (12)]. There is no evidence that he ever performed the duties of the office. He contends that the 6th defendant, his elder brother, did the duties of the office for himself and his brother, the 7th defendant. The 6th defendant himself who is called as a witness does not say so, nor does the 7th defendant. The only basis for this contention is a statement made by the 6th defendant that in the division of the lands belonging to Chandrasekara Bhattar a fourth share was allotted jointly to him and his brother (Exhibit II). From this Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar wants us to infer that the duties of the office were performed by the 6th defendant not only for himself but for the 7th defendant as the joint owner of a fourth share of the office of Chandrasekara Bhattar. I am wholly unable to draw any such inference. It is further doubtful whether the possession of the 6th defendant was adverse to the plaintiff (see Exhibits R and S). I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation.

I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. I also agree to the order on the memorandum of objections.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Reversioner, suit by, for declaration that alienation by widow is partially void—Form of decree—Hindu widow, power of, to alienate for future maintenance.

It is open to a Hindu reversioner to file a suit for a declaration that an alienation by a Hindu widow is partially valid and partially void as against his reversionary rights. [p. 968, col. 2; p. 970, col. 1.]

The proper form of decree in such cases would be one declaring that the alienation should affect plaintiff's reversionary rights only to the extent to which legal necessity is proved and that it is otherwise invalid as against him. [p. 969, col. 1.]

Where the income derived by a Hindu widow is insufficient for her future maintenance, she has power to reasonably alienate property to provide for her maintenance. She is not bound to wait till she has incurred debts on her maintenance before being justified in making any alienation. JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—Plaintiff sued as a reversionary heir for a declaration that the sale of a house by his deceased brother's widow was void beyond her life-time, or in the alternative that, on paying the amount of any part of the consideration that may be held to have been for 'legal necessity,' he would be entitled to get back the possession of the house. He has been granted a declaration that after the widow's death he would be entitled to claim the house on paying Rs. 1,000 only to the alienee. The latter now appeals.

The first ground taken is that plaintiff is in any case not entitled to a declaration of the kind in question. This contention is based on the view taken by Sir Barnes Peacock in Phool Chund Lal v. Rughooburns Suhaye 1) which was followed by the Madras High Court in Singam Setti Sanjivi Kondaya v. Draupadi Bayamma (2). This latter decision has, however, been dissented from in Garikipati Paparayudu v. Garikipati Rattamma (3), where it is pointed out that the authority of Sir Barnes Peacock's decision is neutralised by the subsequent enactment in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and the Privy Council case of Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (4). I concur with the reasoning in the later Madras decision and think there is nothing contrary to law in such a suit as the present. In fact illustration (d) to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act plainly shows that such a suit is one authorized by that section. It also is desirable that such questions should be litigated during the widow's life-time rather than after her death, when less evidence as to the legal necessity, or otherwise, of the alienation will ordinarily be available. There is, however, one point which may be noticed. In Garikipati Paparayudu v. Garikipati Rattamma (3) it is said that the proper form of decree in a case of this kind would be to make merely a declaration that the alienee has a charge for a certain sum of money. There is no doubt an objection to declaring that the reversioner who sues will be entitled to possession on payment of a certain sum of money. It might, for instance, turn out that he was not really the nearest reversioner. And in this particular case plaintiff has two brothers (defendants Nos. 3 and 4), and though they did not appear in the suit, yet their reversionary rights, which are admitted by the plaintiff, should not be ignored by the Court, as has been done in the declaration given to plaintiff. A preferable form of decree would be one declaring that the alienation should affect plaintiff's reversionary rights only to the extent to which legal necessity is proved and that it is otherwise invalid as against him. This would have the effect of giving the alienee a charge on the property for the ascertained sum as against the reversionary heir [cf. Doorga Persad Singh v. Doorga Konwari (5)], and at the same time not prejudice the rights of any others who may have an interest in the reversion.

Coming to the merits, the main facts held proved by the lower Courts are that the house had been mortgaged by the widow's husband for Rs. 600, and to pay off this debt, another debt of Rs. 75 incurred for pilgrimage expenses and her husband's funeral expenses she mortgaged it to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,000. The house included a shop, which brought in Rs. 4-12 per month as rent, subsequently increased to Rs. 6. From this she used to defray the interest on the mortgage, viz., Rs. 3-6 per month. She then sold the house to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 4,500, alleging that she was full owner of it under a Will of her husband, which has, however, been held to be not proved. In her written statement she pleads that she sold the house in order to discharge the mortgage-debt and for her maintenance expenses, to meet which she had no other means. On the other hand, it has been held that her husband left her about Rs. 100 worth of debts and moveables, and about Rs. 100 worth of ornaments. The Sub-Judge holds that the widow was in need of raising Rs. 1,000 to pay off Motising, but holds that she was not justified in raising more for her maintenance, (1) because a widow is not entitled to anticipate her wants by raising money, but must wait till the necessity arises, and (2) because "Rs. 6 of the rent of the shop would be entirely at the disposal of the widow and would be quite enough for her maintenance." The Joint Judge in appeal concurred in this view, saying that "legal necessity" excludes anticipation of wants by raising money to meet them and that such "legal necessity" accordingly did not cover more than Rs. 1,000 as held by the lower Court.

The first of the above reasons is based on the statement to that effect contained in Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, section 633, at page 882. But this statement itself follows one that a widow may, of course, mortgage or sell the property so as to procure maintenance for herself. It is quite clear that a stage may be reached when, in order to provide for her future maintenance, a widow may reasonably alienate property: and I do not think Mr. Mayne can be taken to have meant that a widow must necessarily wait till she has incurred debts on her maintenance before she is justified in making alienation for procuring maintenance for herself. No hard and fast rule of that kind can, in my opinion, be laid down; and as has been said in Venkaji v. Vishnu (6) "a widow, like a manager of the family, must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided.....she acts fairly to the expectant heirs." This passage, it may be noted, has been cited by Mr. Mayne himself in section 635 at page 884 of the 8th Edition of his work on Hindu Law. The cases contemplated in the other passage relied on by the lower Courts are clearly ones where the circumstances show no actual pressure on the widow of real necessity for raising money. Thus in Mullakal v. Mada Chetty (7), the only case cited in the footnote to the passage in question as authority for it, the widow had made the alienation in consideration of the alienee undertaking to celebrate her funeral ceremonies at his own expense, and it was held that there was no 'legal necessity', because the occasion for incurring the expense could not arise until the death of the vendor and it was in any case unnecessary for her to make provision for such an outlay.

In the present case the widow, after payment of interest, had only Rs. 2-10-0 (6) 18 B. 534 at p. 536.

(7) 6 Mad. Jur. 261.

MOTISING V. SOBOMAL.

per month available for her own maintenance out of the rent of the shop, and the view of the Sub-Judge that after discharging defendant No. 1's mortgage-debt the entire rent would have been at her disposal is one that implies for its basis a finding that the house could have been sold without the shop. This is a point which does not seem to have been considered by the lower Courts. Again, it is sometimes impossible for a widow to arrange a sale of the portion of the property exactly sufficient to raise the amount required, and in such cases a sale of more would be justified, cf. Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 468, and Felaram Roy v. Bagalanand (8).

The view of the law taken by the lower Courts has, in my opinion, been far too strict against the widow and the finding that the sale is valid only to the extent of Rs. 1,000 cannot, therefore, be accepted. That decision is based on an erroneous view of the law, and the evidence on the record is insufficient to enable this Court to determine properly the extent to which 'legal necessity' for the sale is shown. I would, therefore, direct the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, to take additional evidence relevant to the following issues and return such evidence, together with its findings thereon and reasons therefor, to this Court within three months, viz :—

(1) Was there 'legal necessity' for the widow (appellant No. 2) raising money for her own maintenance by sale of the premises in suit or any portion thereof?

(2) If there was no 'legal necessity' for raising as much as Rs. 4,500, for discharging debts incurred for her maintenance, was it possible for her to have sold only a portion of the house sufficient to raise the requisite amount and if so, to what extent is the alienation valid?

PRATT, J. C.—I concur that it is open to a reversioner to sue for a declaration that an alienation is partially void as against his reversionary rights and that the form of decree proposed by my learned colleague would be appropriate to such cases.

The lower Courts have refused to admit maintenance as a necessity justifying the alienation in the present case, on the ground that legal necessity "excludes anticipation of wants by raising money to meet them." This is too narrow a view of the widow's power of alienation. If the widow's income was insufficient for her maintenance, it would be absurd if the law required her to go through the circuitous and expensive process of first incurring debt and then alienating in order to pay off that debt. In such a case the insufficiency of the income would be a pressure justifying immediate alienation. The Privy Council take the same view as the Bombay High Court that a widow should be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers. This, I think, is apparent from the case of Amarnath Shah v. Achan Kuar (9). The widow there had succeeded to a family money business as well as to immoveable property. The money business was in difficulties and to support it the widow raised money by mortgaging immoveable property. The High Court held that the widow should have wound up the money business and not mortgaged the landed estate. The Privy Council refused to endorse this view, implying that the alienation may have been justified by the requirements of the business.

On the other hand, the alienation must not be in excess of the requirements of the case. And it is on this point that I agree that further evidence is necessary. In Mullakkal v. Mada Chetty (7), the Court considered that the widow could have provided for her maintenance by alienating her life-interest only. But it is not clear if this was feasible in the present case as the property was mortgaged. Nor is it clear that the sums so realizable would have sufficed. The Sub-Judge appears to have considered that the widow could have sold the residential part of the premises and lived on the rent of the shop. But the evidence does not disclose whether this was possible.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot giving judgment for the plaintiff in a suit on three promissory notes, which were executed by the 1st defendant who died before the trial. The Subordinate Judge has written a very careful judgment, and I do not find it necessary to dissent from any of the conclusions of fact at which he has arrived. He has decided the case on the ground that under the Negotiable Instruments Act, the burden is on the representative of the 1st defendant to show failure of consideration in whole or in part and he has observed in the course of his judgment that but for the burden of proof being this way he would probably, on account of the suspicious circumstances of the various transactions to which he refers, have decided the suit against the plaintiff except to the extent of the consideration admitted by the 1st defendant in his written statement. Farran, C. J. in Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Tharia Topan (1), held that the fact that the defendant in that case was a young man of extravagant habits who was kept out of the enjoyment of his property which was in the hands of a Receiver was sufficient to throw the burden on to the plaintiff. It appears to me that the facts of the present case are very much stronger than the facts in Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Mehdi Tharia Topan (1), and that they have that effect. The 1st defendant was a young man of extravagant habits, who, though, as the Subordinate Judge finds, he was supplied by his family with abundant means for his maintenance, borrowed in a very extravagant manner both from the present plaintiff and from others after he came of age, so that his elder brother was obliged to sue for partition. All the transactions in this suit took place before the 1st defendant obtained his share of the property on partition. The transactions with the present plaintiff fall under three heads. In the year 1906, the 1st defendant borrowed over Rs. 1,600 from the plaintiff and afterwards denied receipt of consideration. This put a stop to the transactions between the parties for sometime. But in 1908 they were resumed, and between March 1908 and May 1908 the 1st defendant is said to have borrowed from the plaintiff a sum of over Rs. 6,000 on promissory notes which have been made the subject of separate suits. Lastly, we come to the plaintiff transactions, three promissory notes for Rs. 3,000, Rs. 3,400 and Rs. 3,000 which are said to have been borrowed in June, August and November 1908. So that between March and November 1908, the 1st defendant is said to have borrowed more than Rs. 15,000 from the plaintiff.

(1) 20 B. 367.

SUNDARAMMAL v. SUBRAMANIA CHETTIAR.

The Subordinate Judge has enumerated the various suspicious circumstances which attended these transactions, and I think it only necessary to refer to one or two of them as sufficient to shift the burden. The Subordinate Judge finds that the plaintiff has not means to make the advances shown in his accounts to the 1st defendant and his other clients. According to the plaintiff's own evidence his transactions with other clients were on a very small scale. He says that their total indebtedness to him was Rs. 3,000, whereas he purports to have made advances of no less than Rs. 15,000 in the course of these few months to the 1st defendant. The Subordinate Judge finds, and I agree with him, that the plaintiff's accounts do not show that he had enough money to make such advances. It is, of course, possible that these accounts may not fully represent his transactions and may have been prepared for the purpose of deceiving the income-tax authorities. In the course of cross-examination the plaintiff set up various false cases as to how he got the money. One absurd story he told was that he had sold all his wife's jewels for the purpose of getting money to make these advances to the 1st defendant. I think that is quite incredible. I do not believe the allegation of the 1st defendant in his written statement as to what he received on these promissory notes. On the other hand, I am equally far from believing that the plaintiff really advanced the whole of these amounts as he says. It seems to me that where the relation is such as that which existed between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant very little is needed to shift the burden.

The other evidence is fully dealt with by my learned brother in his written judgment, and it is sufficient for me to say the effect of that evidence is to shift the burden which was on the defendant to show that the full consideration of the promissory notes has not been paid, and that being so, judgment can only be given for the amounts which are admitted to have been received by the 1st defendant. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the decree will be modified accordingly with costs throughout.

executed by the 1st defendant on the 4th June 1908, 20th August 1908 and 11th November 1908 respectively. The 1st defendant pleaded that excepting small sums of money paid on the occasion of the registration of each of the three promissory notes, there was no consideration for them. He died pending the suit and before evidence was gone into. His widow has been brought on the record as his legal representative. The Subordinate Judge in a very careful judgment, in which he draws attention to all the salient features of the case, came to the conclusion that the burden of proof was upon the defendants and that it was never shifted on to the plaintiff, and upon that ground alone, although he was of opinion that there were many suspicious circumstances connected with the execution of the promissory notes, he gave a decree for the plaintiff as prayed for. The widow of the 1st defendant has appealed. I am unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that in the circumstances of the case to which I shall presently refer the burden of proof was not shifted to the plaintiff.

The father of the 1st defendant died in 1900 leaving behind him the 1st defendant who was then a minor and another son, the step-brother of the 1st defendant. He died possessed of considerable property and on his death, their management passed into the hands of the 1st defendant's step-brother who was older in years. While the step-brother was managing the 1st defendant Appava Chetty began to contract debts. The first transaction was about September 1906 when a promissory note was executed by Appavu for Rs. 2,000 in favour of the plaintiff in consideration of the latter transferring a deed of mortgage executed to him by a third party. No explanation has been given as to why Appavu was saddled with the collection of a mortgage-debt and why he gave a promissory note in exchange. The mortgage which was transferred was for Rs. 1,200, and it was suggested that at the time of the promissory note, probably the amount of the principal and interest due on the mortgage amounted to Rs. 2,000. The deed itself has not been put in evidence. This is a very suspicious circumstance. The next promissory note was executed by Appavu to plaintiff on the 28th October 1906 for Rs. 176 carrying interest at 18 per cent.

SUNDARAMMAL v. SUBRAMANIA CHETTIAR.

per annum. Three days later, on the 1st November 1906, a third promissory note for Rs. 200 was given. Eight days after, a fourth for Rs. 450, and after three weeks on the 2nd December 1906 a fifth promissory note for Rs. 500 was executed, all bearing interest at 18 per cent. per annum. On the 4th January 1907 Appavu sent a registered notice, Exhibit R, through his Vakil to the effect that full consideration was not paid in respect of the fourth and fifth promissory notes and that he would not be liable for their payment. To this, a reply, Exhibit R1, was given on the very next day, saying that the contents of the notice were "highly surprising, fraudulent and shocking." The notice went on to say: "Further, you should pay me within 31st January 1907, the amount of the principal and interest due on the abovesaid (5) five promissory notes which you have executed in my favour, endorse payments on the respective bonds and obtain return of those. If you do not do so, suit will be filed at once in Civil Court and the amounts recovered with costs." In or about September 1907, the elder brother of Appavu filed a suit against the plaintiff for partition of the family properties, the apparent object being to relieve himself from liability for the debts which Appavu was recklessly contracting at this time. The suit itself terminated in a compromise, Exhibit IX, on the 15th October 1909. During the pendency of this suit, 1st defendant began to borrow further sums of money from the plaintiff. The borrowings are preceded by an abject apology, Exhibit S dated the 14th March 1909, for having given the notice, Exhibit R. Then on that very day, a promissory note for Rs. 675 was executed by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff. Four days after, on the 18th March, a promissory note for Rs. 2,175 was executed. Twenty days after on the 10th April 1908, another for Rs. 2,000 was executed. Then we come to the suit promissory notes. The first of them was on the 4th June 1908 for Rs. 3,000, the second was on the 20th August 1908 for Rs. 3,400 and the third was on the 11th November 1908 for Rs. 3,000. These promissory notes following in quick succession naturally create a great deal of suspicion. It has to be remembered that, even according to the evidence of the plaintiff, 1st defendant Appavu was 21 years of age in 1908. When he began his borrowings in 1906 he had just emerged from his minority. He was a man of large expectations and was out of possession, because the management of the properties was in the hands of his brother. Those circumstances, in my opinion, shift the burden of proof on to the plaintiff and the facts that the executant is dead and that the plaintiff now seeks to recover the amount from a young woman, who admittedly has no knowledge of the circumstances under which the promissory notes were executed, make it more incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that there was consideration for the promissory notes sued on. In Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Mehdi Tharia Topan (1), Sir Charles Farran, Chief Justice, says:—"The defendant, when he executed the notes sued upon, was a young man who had only attained his majority nine months previously. He appears to have been of an extravagant and reckless character. He was entitled to a large amount of property under the Will of his father, the late Sir Tharia Topan of Zanzibar, but had not come into possession of it, as on account of family disputes it was, in common with the rest of the family estate, in the hands of a Receiver appointed by this Court. The plaintiffs are a Marwadi firm who are by profession money-lenders. These facts being admitted (apart from the technical rule laid down in section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act), the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value is so much weakened that the allegation of the young man that he has not received full consideration is sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money-lender the obligation of satisfying the Court that he has paid the consideration in full. This, we think, the practical effect of illustration (c) to section 114 of the Evidence Act, and its Explanation." In the present case also the plaintiff is a money-lender. It is also in evidence that Appavu was a man of reckless character and was leading a wasteful life. He denied consideration except to a small extent. Therefore the observations of the learned Chief Justice apply to the present case to their full extent. I think that the present case is even stronger than the case before the Bombay High Court. As I pointed out, the transactions began with a suspicious transfer of a mortgage document. Appavu was involved on litigation with his brother. On these additional reasons and having regard to the principles laid down by the learned Chief Justice, I have no hesitation in holding that the burden of proof is heavily on the plaintiff in this case to show that consideration passed for the plaint notes.

Company—Documents, inspection of—Report of Company's agent for the express purpose of laying it before Company's Solicitor, whether privileged.

A letter written by an agent of a Company giving details of a claim, in pursuance of an order of the Company to submit reports in all cases of claim of a serious nature not merely as an ordinary duty but expressly to be laid before the Company's Solicitor, is privileged and its inspection cannot be granted in a suit for that claim if there is nothing to show that the letter was sent for any other purpose. ORDER.—A collision occurred in the Rangoon river between the S. S. "Glenogle" and a cargo-boat, which was being towed by the defendant Company's steam launch "Ailsa" on February 12th, 1913. The next day the owner of the cargo-boat made a claim to the local agents of the defendant Company for Rs. 4,000 compensation for the loss of his boat. Defendant Company's local agents repudiated liability in toto and on the following day wrote to the managing agents of the Company in Calcutta informing them of the claim. The owner of the cargo which was in the cargo boat has now brought a suit to recover damages for the loss of the cargo, and the point I have to decide is as to whether he is entitled to inspection of that letter. Mr. P. H. Browne has filed an affidavit setting out the facts recited above and stating that this letter was sent setting out a short account of the collision for the information of the defendant Company's Solicitors. I have seen that letter. He further states that the local agents have standing orders to send "reports of claims of a serious nature made against the defendant Company to the managing agents of the said Company in India, in order that the circumstances under which the said claims are made may be laid before the defendant Company's Solicitors in Calcutta as to what action should be taken in such cases." On the one hand, it is urged that this letter is privileged on the ground that it is information collected by the local agents and reported to the managing agents for the use of their Solicitors in respect of a pending or anticipated litigation. The argument on the other side is that the letter was not so written; it was merely information from the local agents from which the managing agents might prepare a report which they would submit to the Solicitors, that it was not written merely for this object, and further that it was written in the course of their ordinary duty to report a collision. I have been referred to a certain number of authorities and as there are very few cases in India I will deal with these. In Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia (1), a case decided in 1876, the point is fully dealt with. That was a case in which a claim was made on the Bank for a certain sum of money which, it was said, had been transferred from an account in which the plaintiff and others were interested to the private account of one of those others, and that this transfer was fraudulent and void. The manager of the Bank stated that on receiving the claim and on considering what had passed between him and the plaintiff in an interview he considered that litigation was imminent and thought it right that the Bank should have legal advice and that for that purpose he should obtain from the branch manager the full particulars of all the facts and circumstances of the case likely to be required by the Solicitor of the Bank. He telegraphed for full particulars, and in reply received a letter, inspection of which was claimed. Jessel, M. R., decided that that letter was not privileged. He points out that in the telegram "there is not a syllable there which shows that any communication, direct or indirect, expressed or implied, was made to the agent to the effect that his communication was to be a confidential one for the purpose of being submitted to the professional man, that is, the Solicitor—for advice. If it had been so, I apprehend that it would have been protected upon principles well understood. If you ask your agent to draw out a case for the opinion of your Solicitor, or for the opinion of your Counsel, that is a confidential communication made for that purpose. Here there is nothing of the sort. Nor is it suggested or alleged that, without being requested, the agent did make the communication with the object of its being laid before the Solicitor for advice. He, therefore, did not make it as a confidential communication in any other sense than that in which every communication from an agent to his principal, or from a sub-agent to the chief agent of the principal, is confidential. . . . This communication, then, as regards the sender, was not made or sent for the purpose of being laid before a professional adviser, nor was there any intimation of such purpose sent by the person who required the communication. All that you have got is a statement of the person who sent the telegram as to the state of his feelings at a particular time, which is not sufficient for the purpose of the point I have to determine." He then proceeds to deal with what is the rule and what is the meaning of the rule, referring to the previous authorities, then what is the extent of the rule, pointing out that it refers to a communication other than those made by the client to the professional man himself. He points out further that neither the Solicitor nor the client is bound to collect information or testimony himself. This is more so in a case where the information or testimony has to be obtained from a distance.

This decision went up on appeal, and James, L. J., remarks: "Looking at the dicta and the judgments cited, they might require to be fully considered, but I think they may possibly all be based upon this, which is an intelligible principle, that as you have no right to see your adversary's brief, you have no right to see that which comes into existence merely as the materials for the brief." He points out that the manager merely called for full information and that that was his ordinary duty. "It is the duty of a man, in the ordinary course of business, to do it, and it is not necessarily connected with the litigation either actually commenced or expected. It is the information of the agent, and the principal ought to know what the agent knows. The knowledge of the agent in the matter of the agency is, or ought to be, the knowledge of the principal." Mellish, L. J., deals with a supposititious case at sea and states that before determining whether he will bring or defend an action a man writes to say: "Get me an account from all the passengers and crew what each man can say respecting this transaction, write it down as accurately as you can, and send it up to me." "It might be that that would be privileged just as much if he sent and asked for it before he determined whether he would bring an action or defend an action as it would be if it was sent after the action was commenced, and he wished to obtain information as to what evidence such persons would probably give." As to that he considers that "as a general rule, it may be he is not bound to give the discovery respecting that, but I cannot think that that ought to be held to apply to information which a principal asks his agent to give respecting the matters which the agent has done for and on account of the principal. That is information respecting matters which in point of law are the acts of the principal himself, and it is information respecting matters as to which the knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the principal. In point of law, the principal is to be deemed to have known the facts before he has actually got personal information about them." Now in that case the particulars supplied were as to the acts and conduct of the agent. In the present case the local agents did not know anything of their personal knowledge. They were reporting what other persons, who would be in a position to give evidence if the case came before a Court, could and would say. In that case there was nothing either in the telegram or in the letter in reply suggesting that the information was asked for or supplied for the purpose of being laid before the Bank's professional adviser. In the present case Mr. Browne's affidavit shows that they acted not on a request made after the collision had occurred, but on standing orders to send a report in order that the circumstances under which the claims are made may be laid before the defendant Company's Solicitors for advice, and the affidavit also shows that this letter was sent as a confidential communication for the information of the defendant Company's Solicitors. This authority further shows, it appears to me, that in the opinion of the learned Judges of the first Court and the Appellate Court who heard that case, a document such as the one I have to consider would be privileged.

That the rule is not to be further extended is, I think, shown by the decision in the case of the Southwark & Vauxhall Water Co. v. Quick (2), where it is held that documents prepared in relation to an intended action, whether at the request of a Solicitor or not, and whether ultimately laid before the Solicitor or not, are privileged if prepared with a bona fide intention of being laid before him for the purpose of taking his advice. Cockburn, C. J., dealt with the documents, which were transcripts of a shorthand writer's notes of conversation with possible witnesses prepared to be furnished to the Company's Solicitor for advice, and the same of an interview between the Chairman of the Company and certain servants of the Company prepared for the same reason, and a statement of the facts drawn up by the Chairman to be submitted to the Company's Solicitor. He says, "It is clear that they were documents containing information which had been obtained by the plaintiffs with a view to consulting their professional adviser.....I can see no distinction between information obtained upon the suggestion of a Solicitor, with the view of its being submitted to him for the purpose of his advising upon it, and that procured spontaneously by the client for the same purpose. If the Court or the Judge at Chambers is satisfied that it was bona fide procured for the purpose, it appears to me that it ought to be privileged." Then, referring to the decision which I have just been dealing with, he says: "I do not feel bound nor am I disposed to carry the doctrine of those decisions to the extent suggested on behalf of the defendant." On appeal the Lord Justice's judgment which I have already quoted was referred to with approval and the appeal was rejected.

The letter I have to deal with refers to what persons present could and did say with reference to the facts of the collision. But it is further urged that this letter was merely written in the ordinary course of duty, and I am referred to Woolley v. North London Railway Co. (3) and Cook v. North Metropolitan Tramway Co. (4). In the first of these cases reports of the defendant Company's inspectors, guards, locomotive superintendent and so on and those of the passengers and a report made by an officer of the Company in the course of his duty for the information of the Company, without reference to any litigation begun or anticipated, were held not privileged. Bovill, C. J., says: "I think, therefore, we may safely lay it down that, where information and opinions are obtained with a view to litigation, they are to be considered as privileged." In the other case, which was one relating to daily reports submitted by conductors and drivers, they were held not to be privileged because though it might have been contemplated in a general way that they should be used in litigation, if litigation should arise, such documents were not protected, they being merely reports made in the course of conductors' daily duties. Mr. Justice Manisty concurring observes that "in the case cited it appeared that an action was intended, and that the document had been obtained to be laid before the Solicitor for the purpose of having his advice with reference to such action. That case was very different from the present, in which a report was made daily, and as to every accident that occurred, without reference to any actions." The standing orders in the present case, it is proved, refer to all cases of a serious nature and the reports were called for by these orders, not merely as an ordinary duty but expressly to be laid before the Company's Solicitor; and in addition the letter, which I have seen, is sent for the express purpose of being laid before the Company's Solicitor. It has been urged that the authorities show that to be privileged it must be sent merely for that purpose. There is nothing before me to show that it was sent for any other purpose, and it being a report of what other persons saw and knew and would depose to and not being information in the knowledge of the local agents personally which can be presumed to be the knowledge of the principal, the letter is, in my opinion, privileged and inspection cannot be granted. Plaintiff must pay the costs of this hearing to defendants, Advocate's fees three gold mohurs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar in Appeal Suits Nos. 38 and 47 of 1912, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif of Kuthuparamba, in Original Suit No. 623 of 1910.

Mr. K. Govinda Marar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Ramanatha Shenai, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th November and the 3rd December 1914, the Court (Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The parties are Moplahs, and neither side put forward any special plea as to the applicability to the family they belong to of Marumakkattayam Law or any system other than the Muhammadan. The construction of the stridhanam deed, Exhibit A, will, however, unless it is governed by special custom, depend on which of these systems should be applied.

The District Munsif, without stating clearly whether he eventually proceeded on Muhammadan or Marumakkattayam Law or special custom, evidently considered that no ordinarily prevalent law would suffice for the decision of the case. For he referred to his ignorance of the incidents of such a transaction, the absence of authority and the evidence as to those incidents. The lower Appellate Court appears to have held that that evidence, so far as it was in the defendants' favour, was counterbalanced by the effect of the decision in Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1). In doing so it assumed what is not clear, that the document then under consideration was similar in terms to Exhibit A and was executed in similar circumstances. It also assumed that this authority was applicable to transactions between members of the plaintiffs' family and represented a custom binding on all the community, to which they belong, of which the Court could take judicial notice. As observed in Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (2), the Courts have power to take judicial notice of a custom, only when its existence among the class affected by it has been proved repeatedly before them. In the present case the lower Appellate Court had before it only one instance of such proof and no clear evidence as to the class then in question or its identity with that of the present parties.

In these circumstances, we cannot accept the lower Appellate Court's decision and must call for a finding on the issues:—

- "1. Whether the parties are governed by Marumakkattayam or Muhammadan Law?
- "2. What are the legal incidents attached to Exhibit A as between the parties with reference to special custom, or if special custom is not established, the ordinary law to which they are subject?"

Fresh evidence should be taken. Findings will be submitted in two months; and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above the District Judge of North Malabar submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I am required by the terms of this reference to decide—

- (1) Whether the parties are governed by Marumakkattayam or by Muhammadan Law?
- (2) What are the legal incidents attached to Exhibit A as between the parties with reference to special custom or if special custom is not established, the ordinary law to which they are subject?

2. As regards the 1st issue both sides are agreed that they are governed by Marumakkattayam Law. I find accordingly.

3. As regards the second issue having regard to the 8th paragraph of 3rd defendant's written statement and to the evidence of the trustworthy witnesses examined before me, I find that the parties are governed as regards the legal incidents of Exhibit A not by special custom, which is not now pleaded on either side, but by the ordinary Marumakkattayam Law. It is proved before me that direct Stridhanam donees cannot mortgage nor alienate their property. In the two panayams that preceded the kanom that forms the subject of the suit the donor joined; so if the kanom was proper so far as the stridhanam right is concerned, she would have been made to join in it. But this was not done.

4. There are two ways of regarding Exhibit A. I am asked by defendants' Pleader to regard it as merging all previous rights under the stridhanam grants. If this be so, the legal incidents of Exhibit A are that two of the three donees cannot encumber nor part with the property. So the kanom is totally invalid.

5. If, as I hold, Exhibit A conveys the reversion of the rights of the donor to the donees in the stridhanam property already granted and also a new gift of the house on item No. 2, but without disturbing the stridhanam rights, and arrangements already existing, the preservation of which rights and arrangements is the explanation for the clause forbidding the donees "creating any debts thereon by yourselves" then again the incidents attaching to Exhibit A are such as to make any kanom on stridhanam property invalid. It does not seem to me that Exhibit A is a simple deed of gift but that, as their Lordships have said, it is a stridhanam gift and, therefore, the ordinary incidents of such a gift attached to it, which is also borne out by the action of the executants of the kanom-deed who made their respective husbands attesting witnesses to it, which corresponds to what is said before me in evidence to-day, viz., that whatever may have been the custom long ago, stridhanam gifts are now-a-days invariably made in the names of wives who hand the property over to their husbands for management.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing on the 12th of August 1915, after the return of the findings of the District Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The questions that have to be determined in this appeal have reference to the rights of three sisters, the 1st plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants, and of the 3rd defendant who claims under the 1st and 2nd defendants in regard to two parambaks or plots of land.

It is admitted that these two plots of land together with a third to which these proceedings do not relate, originally belonged to the mother of the three sisters. The mother purported to grant, on two occasions, certain rights over the two plots of land, and over a house built on the first of the two plots.

On the first of these occasions the grants were oral. They have been conveniently, though not very accurately, referred to as stridhanam gifts. They consisted of three separate gifts of the three plots of land respectively made to the sisters at the time when they were married—about 20 years prior to the suit.

On the second occasion there was one grant by Exhibit A executed on the 13th August 1902.

In 1901, i. e., after the first and before the second of these occasions, the said house had been built by the mother on the first of the plots of ground (which had been granted as stridhanam to the 1st defendant) and that house and the moveables in it are also included in the grant under Exhibit A.

As the 3rd defendant derives his title from two of the three sisters (the 1st and 2nd defendants and not from the 1st plaintiff), it is necessary to consider (1) what interest the 1st and 2nd defendants acquired in the first and second items of property under the stridhanam gifts, in order to determine what they were competent to transfer to the 3rd defendant; (2) whether the 1st and 2nd defendants acquired any further interest in the said properties under Exhibit A and if so, (3) whether the interest was transferable and (4) whether it has been validly transferred to the 3rd defendant.

The so-called stridhanam gifts were ostensibly made to the husbands of the three sisters. But it has been admitted before us that the real beneficiaries are the sisters themselves, and that the gifts must be construed as though they were to the sisters.

There was some dispute before us as to the law by which the various transactions must be governed.

In order that we may determine the effect of the stridhanam gifts, Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1) was cited to us, in which it is stated that under Muhammadan Law a girl when married passes over to her husband's family, and that there is no obligation on the members of her natural family to maintain her after her marriage, even if she is divorced. But under Muhammadan Law though after marriage the wife goes to live in the house of her husband, there is no severance of the family ties. Her right to maintenance from her blood relations is no doubt suspended so long as she can claim maintenance from her husband. The claim against her husband, however, is lost on divorce, and then her right against her relations by blood may revive, though she might then be under some other personal disability (such as possession of property) preventing her from claiming any maintenance from her blood relations. But the law of maintenance under Muhammadan Law is somewhat elaborate, and need not be referred to for the present case.

In Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1) it is, however, merely decided that for the reasons stated, the gift which had to be considered in that case did not become void on the wife being divorced. The gift then under consideration was, it seems, similar in the following respects to the gift in the present case, viz., (1) it was also referred to as stridhanam gift (2), it was made at the time of marriage and (3) for the maintenance of the wife, (4) but ostensibly to the husband. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the result arrived at in Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1), even though the reference to the Muhammadan Law of maintenance was not quite accurate; but it would not affect the present case in which there is no dissolution of the marriage by divorce or death, and no allegation that the stridhanam gifts had become void. But there are other difficulties to which we shall allude below in the way of our importing the terms of the gift that was under consideration in Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1) into the gift we have to consider.

Similar remarks apply to the unreported case mentioned in Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1). We have, however, looked into the records of Second Appeal No. 1746 of 1895 and we find that the decision was arrived at after evidence had been taken as to custom. That evidence cannot affect the present case.

In the present case we have a finding by consent that the parties govern themselves by the Marumakkattayam Law. In determining the appropriate system of law that has to be selected by the Court for deciding any question before it, the fact that the parties have been governing themselves in regard to similar transactions by a particular system of law or by some special custom may be of great assistance; and the choice of the law is in some matters made by the Legislature to depend entirely upon this circumstance. But in the present case we find that there is no evidence that the parties considered themselves to be bound, in regard to such transactions as those with which we have to deal, by any specific rule either of a recognised system of law or of custom proved in the present case.

Hence in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience the proper course would be to give effect as far as possible to the intention of the parties, unless there is something repugnant to any legislative enactment or to public policy. Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammatt Mohumdee Begum (3)

The District Munsif was, therefore, right in turning to the evidence in this case for determining what the intention of the parties was when the oral stridhanam gifts were made; and the Subordinate Judge erred in considering that the incidence of the gift referred to in Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1) (the terms of which were contained in a document) had necessarily to be imported into the gifts in the present case. It is true that if it is known that on certain occasions (e. g., on marriage) gifts are customarily made amongst members of a certain community or other class of persons with specific incidents, and the Court has to determine the incident of a gift made on a similar occasion by a member of the said community, it is legitimate to infer in the absence of something to the contrary that the gift in question must have been with the incidents known to be usual or customary: Indian Evidence Act, section 114. But this presupposes the existence of some usual or common course of conduct brought within the cognisance of the Judge either by his taking judicial notice of the fact or through evidence adduced before him. Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (2). In the present case the District Munsif expressly disclaims any experience as to similar gifts, which he says have seldom come before him for decision. Nor does the Subordinate Judge rely on any such experience, but after referring to the evidence, consisting of the 1st plaintiff's admissions which as he says "would tend to give some support to the 3rd defendant's contention," adds "but there is distinct authority for holding that it is not legal and sound" and cites Packrichi v. Kunhacha (1). That decision as already pointed out turns upon the construction of a particular document of gift. The construction of that gift cannot merely owing to its having some common features affect the decision in the present case, unless in some such way as we have mentioned, e. g., if a common form so to say of such gifts had been within the cognisance of the Court.

The Subordinate Judge has already dealt with the evidence and it is clear that he would have arrived at the same conclusion as the District Munsif, if he had not thought that he was bound by authority to come to a different conclusion.

The result is that the so called stridhanam gifts must, in the present case, be taken to have been intended to enure for the lives of the donees and their descendants, how low soever, and not terminable on the death or divorce of the donee. With reference to the interests taken by the three donees under Exhibit A, we are of opinion that the principle of Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (4), re-affirmed in the recent Full Bench case Machikandi Parkum Maramittath Tharuvil Mootha Chettiam Veetil Chakkara Kannan v. Varayalankandi Kunhi Pokker (5) supports the conclusion at which both Courts have arrived, that that interest must have the incidents of tarwad property.

The appeal will, therefore, be allowed and the District Munsif's decree restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

MEGHRAJ—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Conditional sale—Payment by instalments—Mortgagee, whether can enforce security before expiry of term—Intention of parties Foreclosure.

A suit for foreclosure can be brought for interest of an instalment of money secured by a mortgage by conditional sale. [p. 982, col. 2.]

The right of a mortgagee to enforce his security before the expiry of the term fixed for repayment of the whole of the principal, depends upon the intention of the parties as evidenced by the terms of the bond. [p. 982, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a mortgage deed provided for payment by instalments in the interests of the debtor, and provided against failure to pay by a condition for compound interest adding that if the amount be not paid as stipulated, the mortgaged property will stand foreclosed:

Held (1) that the parties intended that there should be foreclosure only after failure to pay the whole amount in the manner stipulated, [p. 982, col. 2.]

(2) that a separate suit for the first instalment with interest did not lie. [p. 982, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 19th August 1913, modifying that of the Senior Munsif, Katol, dated the 14th April 1913.

Messrs. J. Mittra, N. B. Kinkhede and W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are simple. The suit is brought on a mortgage by conditional sale, dated the 13th May 1899, with a consideration of Rs. 200. The passage in the deed with which we are concerned may be translated as follows:—

"I have borrowed.....total Rs. 200. I will pay interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem till the satisfaction of the amount. I will pay Rs. 00 on account of principal together with interest on the whole amount in the month of Poush 1309, and will further pay Rs. 100 in the month of Poush 1310, together with interest.....If I fail to pay at the stipulated time, I will pay interest at compound rate.....If the amount be not paid as stipulated" (or, "in accordance with the agreement"), "the mortgaged property will stand foreclosed."

Poush 1309 ended on the 30th January 1900, and Poush 1310 on the 20th January 1901. The suit for foreclosure was instituted on the 12th December 1912, more than 12 years after the 30th January 1900, but less than 12 years after the 20th January 1901. The defendant-respondent did not contest the suit as regards the instalment of Rs. 100 payable in January 1901 with interest thereon, but pleaded that the suit, as regards the instalment of Rs. 100 payable in January 1900 and interest thereon, is time-barred. The solution of the question whether the suit is time-barred as regards the first instalment, depends on the question whether the plaintiff would have brought a suit for foreclosure on the first instalment before the second instalment fell due. The learned Counsel for the appellants concedes that if he could have sued before the 20th January 1901 the suit for the first instalment is time-barred.

The learned Munsif held that a suit brought before the second instalment fell due would have been premature, since on the terms of the document he considered that the real intention of the parties was that the mortgage should not be enforced unless the whole debt had become payable, and decreed the claim in full. On appeal the learned District Judge took a different view, and dismissed the claim in respect of the first instalment.

The sole question is whether a suit lay on default of payment of the first instalment with interest, before the second instalment with interest fell due.

The question falls under two heads, namely, whether in India, as in England, there can be foreclosure for part of the money secured by a mortgage by conditional sale, and whether on a proper construction of the document there could have been such a foreclosure in this case. In England the law is clear. There may be a covenant not to call in the money during a certain period, and if there is such a covenant no default in payment of interest will enable the mortgagee to sue; but if there is no such covenant the mortgagee can sue at any time after default of the payment of interest however distant the day at which the payment of the principal money is reserved. That this is the English Law is evident from Burrowes v. Molloy (1) and Edwards v. Martin (2) [referred to in Kamod' Singh v. Raja Raghoji Rao (3)]. Both these cases are referred to with approval in Williams v. Morgan (4). If a suit lay for interest, a fortiori it would lie for an instalment of principal together with interest. In India, there are no reported cases of suits for foreclosure for interest only or for part of the mortgage-money. The case of Mahadeo v. Bukhtawar Mall (5) is on a different point. But there are cases in which it has been held that a suit for sale on a simple mortgage lay for interest only. Kashi Pershad Singh v. Jamuna Pershad Singh (6) is a case in point. It is argued for the appellants that section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates foreclosure only when the whole mortgage money is due, and that the form of the decree under Order XXXIV, rule 2, and sub-rule (3) of Order XXXIV, rule 3, contemplate a suit for the whole of the mortgage-money. For the respondent it is urged that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code apply irrespective of the amount of the mortgage debt sued for. I am bound to say I can find no reason for distinguishing between suits for sale and suits for foreclosure, as regards the question whether a suit can be brought for interest for an instalment.

The true rule appears to be that contained in the English rulings and expounded by Ismay, J. C., in Kamod Singh v. Raja Raghoji Rao (3), that the right of a mortgagee to enforce his security before the expiry of the term fixed for re-payment of the whole of the principal depends upon the intention of the parties as evidenced by the terms of the bond. In Kannu v. Natesa (7) the mortgage-bond provided that in default of the payment of the interest at 8 per cent. on the due dates, interest at 9 per cent. should be charged on the interest in arrears, and the interest on the principal should be raised to 9 per cent. It was held that the true intention of the parties was to postpone the sale of the mortgaged property until the principal became due, and to give the mortgagee, on default of payment of interest, only a right to the enhanced rate of interest on principal and on arrears of interest, and that the mortgaged property could not be brought to sale for arrears of interest before the principal was due. The terms of the bond in the present case are not the same. But it is argued for the appellants that the parties provided a particular remedy for failure to pay the first instalment, namely, compound interest, and did not contemplate foreclosure on each default. It is argued ingeniously for the respondent that the debtor might have paid Rs. 100 principal but no interest, in which case the above arguments for the appellants would not apply. But it appears to me on a careful scrutiny of the terms of the bond that payment by instalments was provided for in the interests of the debtor, that failure to pay the first instalment was sufficiently provided for by the condition for compound interest, and that by the words, "if the amount be not paid as stipulated the mortgaged property will stand foreclosed", the parties intended that there should be foreclosure only after failure to pay the whole amount due in the manner stipulated. It must be presumed that the intention of the parties was that the money should be paid, and I do not believe that they contemplated the possibility of a series of foreclosure suits as a means of enforcing the payment. I am of opinion that a separate suit for the first instalment with interest did not lie, and it follows that the suit was in time in respect of the whole mortgage-money. I restore the decree of the first Court, with the modifications that the date for payment is altered from the 14th October 1913 to the 14th October 1915, and that the interest at 6 per cent. per annum will be added to the decretal amount, less costs. The respondent-defendant will pay his own and the plaintiffs' costs in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 26 (3), 27, 28—Presumption re condition of tenure, how rebutted—Amani system—Payment of rent in money—Temporary arrangement—Landlord's right to revert to original usage.

Section 27 of the Madras Estates Land Act raises a presumption that a ryot holds under the same conditions as in the previous revenue year: but that presumption can be rebutted by showing that these conditions were not in accordance with the agreement or usage prevailing between the parties. [p. 986, col. 1; p. 987, col. 1.]

Under section 26 (3) no pattahs, which have been granted by any landholder, at rates lower than the rates payable upon such lands or upon neighbouring land of similar quality and description, shall be binding upon his successor, unless bona fide granted for the purpose of making permanent improvements and unless the tenant shall have conformed to the condition upon which such lower rates were allowed. [p. 985 col. 2.]

The rule of law contained in sections 27 and 28 of the Act that the rent paid for the previous Fasli should be presumed to be fair, will not apply when it is fixed by an ex parte decision in which all the points upon which the parties were at variance were left open. [p. 986, col. 1.]

Where in a suit brought by a landlord to compel his ryots to accept pattahs on the amani system, the tenants contended that they were entitled to be assessed at a money rate of rent and denied the usage set up by the plaintiff to pay rents in kind and it was found that the arrangement to pay money rents was a purely temporary one liable to be given up at any time if the zemindar preferred to go to the trouble of collecting his waram:

Held, that whether the rates were high or low either party was at liberty to revert to their original contract or usage, shown to have been merely in abeyance during the years when the rents payable from year to year were uncertain and when temporary arrangements prevailed. [p. 986, col. 1.]

When no data are available to fix the waram rates, the proper procedure is to adopt the pamaish rate. [p. 985, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—These and other connected suits were brought under the provisions of section 56 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, by a landholder to compel his ryots to accept the pattahs tendered to them for Fasli 1318. In such suits it is the duty of the Revenue Court, under section 57 of the Act, to determine what is a proper pattah. The proprietor claimed that a usage existed in this village to collect rents according to the amani system; in other words, that the ryots should give rents in waram which implies a division of the crop between the landholder and the ryot (vide section 29 of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908). To this the ryots rejoined that by a long standing custom they had been paying fixed money rents, and they denied the usage set up by the plaintiff to pay rents in kind. The question thus arose whether money rents or waram rents were the rents established by agreement or custom in this village.

The Deputy Collector who tried these suits found that the plaintiff had not proved that the rents contended for by him were the rents lawfully payable. He also found that the rents contended for by the defendants had not been proved to be the fixed money rents lawfully payable.

He then proceeded to discuss the plaintiff's contention that he had a right to revert to the amani system in the light of Act I. of 1908; which he considered to have altered the law as laid down in section 11 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865). This section provided that, if either party were dissatisfied with the rates determined by the Collector according to local usage or to rates paid for neighbouring lands, he might claim to have the rent discharged in kind according to the waram. There is no similar provision in the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908); but section 27 of that Act declares: "If a question arises as to the amount of rent payable by a ryot, or the conditions under which he holds in any revenue year, he shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, to hold at the same rate, and under the same conditions, as in the last preceding revenue year;" and the next section creates a presumption that the rent payable for the time being is fair and equitable, until the contrary is proved. Finally, the Deputy Collector decided that the proper rents payable for Fasli 1318 should be those decreed in the plaintiff's suit to recover rent for Fasli 1317. The District Judge on appeal agreed with the Deputy Collector's findings of fact except as to the date up to which the amani system prevailed. In his opinion, there was evidence that it prevailed up to the year 1871, whereas the Deputy Collector found that it was not in force subsequent to 1868.

There are five periods of management to be considered in the history of this Sillathur zemindari. The first is the period between 1855 and 1867 when the estate was under the management of Rani Ammal; the second is the period between 1868 and 1870 when the Court of Wards were in charge; and the third is the period between 1871 and 1900 when Rangasami Pannikondar was the zemindar. During the fourth period of 1900-1905, the ownership of the estate was in litigation and a Receiver appointed by the Sub-Court was managing it. The fifth and the last period dates from 1905 when the present plaintiff came into possession by purchase. Whether the amani system lasted till 1867 or till 1870 is not of much consequence, so far as the date is concerned. The important matter is whether the payments of rent in money which the tenants made from time to time were really payments in lieu of waram, and whether that system had been entirely abandoned by the parties, or was in reality underlying all their relationships up to the date of suit. The District Judge held that the arrangement to pay money rents was a purely temporary one liable to be given up at any time if the zemindar preferred to go to the trouble of collecting his waram. This is a finding of fact which is binding on this Court in second appeal. Moreover, the observation of the District Judge that the rent payable under the periodical Settlement called gadupattukkattu was a provisional arrangement, appears to be sound. It is supported by the derivation of the word, and it has been shown that the payments varied according to the crops grown on the land, as disclosed by the evidence of defendants' witness No. 12 who says, "Every four or five years, the land is classified, the lower class being taken into the higher class and increased rentals levied. The higher class lands are never altered into the lower class." Defendants' witness No. 3 admitted that gadupattukkattu villages were those in which money rent was paid for a definite period in lieu of the waram due and Exhibit O1 shows that Kottakadu was a gadupattukkattu village. Even the Deputy Collector found that the money rents payable were not fixed rents.

The District Judge also held that the Deputy Collector was wrong in basing his decision on the result of the suit for recovery of rent for Fasli 1317; and in this I think that the District Judge was clearly right. The ryots were ex parte in that suit. There was no adjudication on the question, what was a proper pattah; and in the plaint, the plaintiff reserved his right to have the question whether he was entitled to collect waram, determined in separate proceedings.

During the period under the Court of Ward's management (Faslis 1278 to 1280 corresponding to 1868 to 1870), the District Judge thinks that the amani system prevailed. He bases his decision on certain documents, Exhibits W, GG series, and B. An objection has been taken that Exhibit GG13 to which he refers does not relate to the village of Kottakadu, with which these appeals are concerned. From the appellants' 10th ground of appeal, it appears that the appellants took no objection to the admissibility of Exhibit GG13 but endeavoured to explain its effect away. But assuming that the District Judge was guilty of clerical error in referring to this particular Exhibit, which is of the year 1869, as a lease of 1868, he would not have been wrong if he had referred to Exhibit GG13, which relates to 1868. From the extent given in this document it is probable that Kottakadu lands were included. Even if this were not the case, the document would be relevant as evidence of usage prevalent in the neighbouring parent village, and it contains similar terms to those in Exhibit GG13.

It has also been urged that the last clause of Exhibits of this series which permits the landholder to appropriate the produce of the ijara lands towards the ijara arrears in accordance with the amani rules, is only a reproduction of the landholder's right to attach the crops of his tenants for default of payment of rent, as provided in section 14 of the Act of 1865. But this does not seem to be so. There was no need to mention the amani rules in this connection.

It is further argued that the District Judge has misconstrued Exhibit W and that he was wrong in admitting Exhibit B as evidence that the waram rates prevailed in this period and the preceding period. Exhibit B is a takeed of 1869 which clearly refers to the difficulty in effecting a division of waram in the parent village of Venkarai. As regards Exhibit W, it relates to Fashi 1277 and to this village of Kottakadu and it contains an estimate of the gross outturn of the crops in the holdings of different ryots; and although stress is now laid on the absence of the evidence to prove for what purpose this document was prepared, the defendants' Vakil admitted in the lower Appellate Court that he could not suggest any other purpose besides a division of produce. The genuineness of this document is not in dispute.

In the end, the District Judge, as there was no reliable oral evidence as to the correct waram rates, adopted the paimash waram rates. It does not lie in the mouth of the defendants, who contended in the District Court that, if any waram rates were to be taken, paimash rates were the correct rates, to say that the District Judge was wrong in so doing. They also conceded at the hearing of the suits that the amani system prevailed at the time of the paimash (1829-1830).

The real contention between the parties was on the question whether money rents or grain rents were payable; and on this point the District Judge's finding being one of fact is final, unless it can be shown that it is vitiated by an error in law or by there being no evidence to support his conclusion. In this case his findings are not based merely on the construction of documents.

It is next contended that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in introducing into these suits, which were tried under the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act, a provision whereby either party, dissatisfied with the rates determined according to the local usage, was at liberty under the former Act to revert to the waram rates, and it is urged that the District Judge has wrongly applied section 26 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act, the provisions of which are prospective. This section merely provides that, if a landholder grants a lease of land at a rate lower than the lawful rate payable before the grant, his successor shall not be bound to adopt the same concession. In this respect, it is merely a repetition of the provisions of section 11, clause 4, of the Act of 1865, that no pattahs which have been granted by any landholder at rates lower than the rates payable upon such lands or upon neighbouring lands of similar quality and description shall be binding upon his successor, unless bona fide granted for the purpose of making permanent improvements and unless the tenant shall have conformed to the conditions upon which such lower rates were allowed. This has been the law both before and after the passing of Act I of 1908. I do not think that the District Judge meant to base the landholder's right to have waram rates of rent upon this provision only. He found in his judgment that there was no permanent arrangement to pay money rents and the only alternative, therefore, was to go back to the waram system and this is all that his decision amounts to.

Mr. T. Rangachariar has pressed on our attention that no foundation was laid for the District Judge's assumption that the rates prevailing in these years were low rates. Whether they were high rates or low rates, either party was at liberty to revert to their original contract or usage if it has been shown to have been merely in abeyance during the years when the rents payable from year to year were uncertain and when temporary arrangements prevailed.

If the District Judge had allowed the plaintiff to exercise this option because it was the law laid down by section 11 of Act VIII of 1865, he would have been wrong in making the repealed Act the ground of his decision, but he would have been right in principle under the circumstances of this case, because if there is a fundamental agreement between the parties it should be upheld in spite of temporary lapses sanctioned by mutual consent. This was the principle under which Oliver v. Markanda Aiyar (1) was decided, and in that case even 70 years of agreement to pay money rents for limited periods was not considered to give rise to a necessary implication of a contract to adopt money rents for ever. A similar view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2). The period of transition in these suits was only about 40 years.

Mr. T. Rangachariar wished to make out a refusal on the part of the District Judge to apply sections 27 and 28 of the Madras Estates Land Act to the circumstances of this case. These sections only provide that a presumption will arise that a ryot is bound to pay rent at the same rate as he paid in the preceding revenue year, until the contrary is shown. When it has been shown, as in this case, that the rent paid in the preceding revenue year was fixed by an ex parte decision in which all the points upon which the parties were at variance were left open, and when there is a finding of fact that up to the present rate there has been no contract between the landholder and the ryot to pay a fixed money rent, this is equivalent to showing the contrary of the presumption referred to in those sections. [Vide Beni Pershad Koeri v. Raj Kumar Chowbey (3), as to the value to be attached to the prior decision.]

If the ryots are still dissatisfied with the waram rates fixed in these suits, they have always a remedy provided in section 40 of the Madras Estates Land Act of suing before the Collector to have their rents commuted into definite money rents. But the present suits have not been contested in such a way as to permit the equivalent of the waram rates being now determined in money. For this purpose, it would be necessary to have evidence as to the prices prevailing in the preceding ten years.

We dismiss the second appeal with costs. The memos. of objections are not pressed and are dismissed.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—As this is a matter of some little difficulty and doubtless one of great importance to the parties, I think it right to add my own reasons for our decision. There were a very large number of suits; a great quantity of documents was produced; numerous witnesses were examined and many points were discussed in the lower Courts. The Advocates are to be commended for having focussed the attention of this Court upon a single point, illustrated by only a few of the many documents exhibited.

These suits arose between the proprietor of the Sillattur zemindari and his ryots in the village of Kottakadu in the taluk of Pottukottai. They were brought by the landlord to compel the ryots to receive pattahs and execute muchilikas in respect of their holdings, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter IV of the Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1908. The sole issue which we have to try is this: the landlord contends that his ryots must accept pattahs on the amani system, whereby the rent consists of a fixed portion of their produce; the tenants contend that they are entitled to be assessed at a money rate of rent, and that, therefore, the pattahs tendered are bad. In the view I take of the case, it is not necessary to decide the further question as to what that money rate should be.

The Act is neither very clear nor very well arranged; but I think the language of section 59 illustrates the issue which the Courts below had to determine. That section provides that rent shall be payable in instalments according to agreement or in the absence of agreement, according to established usage; and on that analogy I think the ryot must accept a pattah the general conditions of which conform to such agreement or usage. Section 27 raises a presumption that a ryot holds under the same conditions as in the previous revenue year; but that presumption would be rebutted by showing that those conditions were not in accordance with the agreement or usage prevailing between the parties. It is obvious that the matters to be determined in the suits are ultimately questions of fact; and the determination of the lower Court can only be challenged in one of three ways. There may be no evidence to support the findings; or the learned Judge may have misdirected himself in law in the process of arriving at those findings; or it may be said that his findings of fact, while not open to such objections, do not warrant the conclusion which he has drawn from them. It is in this last way that the appellants' case has been framed; and it, therefore, becomes necessary to examine the judgment, and see exactly what it is that the learned Judge has found.

After a careful review of the somewhat troubled history of the zemindari in the light of such materials as were available to him, the learned Judge comes to the following conclusions:—

1. That up to the year 1871 the amani system prevailed in full force, and the rent consisted of a definite percentage of the produce.

2. That after that time the ryots succeeded in making the successive zemindars agree to take money and not produce as rent.

3. That the amount of such money payments were not fixed once and for all, but was altered every few years on the initiation of the zemindar, and was always altered in the direction of enhancement.

4. That every such alteration was preceded by an inspection of the lands and an estimate of their productivity.

Now so far as we have pure findings of fact and nothing more, they are amply supported by the evidence, and no serious attempt has been made to challenge them. From them the learned Judge has proceeded to draw these further conclusions: that the money payments from 1871, onwards were varied in accordance with the amount of the produce and must be regarded as being made under the amani system, inasmuch as the essence of that system consists in taking from the ryot a contribution varying with the amount of produce; that the fact that the actual physical commodity taken was money and not grain was a mere matter of convenience to the parties; and that pattahs providing for payment of a fixed proportion of the produce must, therefore, be accepted by the ryots. For the ryots it is argued that though there may have been no fixed money rent, it is clearly proved that rent has been paid in money for the last 35 years, and that accordingly to give validity to a pattah on the amani system would be to disregard the outstanding feature of the usage obtaining between the parties. They further say that it is mere surmise to hold that the variation of the money rents paid was based on the proportion in force in the period before 1871, and that the estimates made of the productivity of the land may have been made for other purposes than the fixing of rent.

Mr. T. Rangachariar was, of course, faced with this difficulty: that when it came to fixing the amount of rent payable, the pattah would either have to be silent, or to prescribe such rent as the zemindar should choose or be able to exact. To avoid such an absurdity he points to sections 27 and 28 of the Act, and puts his case in this way: the evidence shows that a money rent was paid; its amount varied no doubt from time to time, but its variation was determined either at haphazard or by factors no longer ascertainable, and accordingly the presumption should take effect that the sum paid in the last revenue year was the proper one to enforce.

I do not think that this contention is sound. Mr. Rangachariar was quite unable to suggest any purpose for which the ascertainment of the produce of the land would be necessary or useful, other than this, one of fixing the rent. Rebuttable presumptions are guides to the ascertainment of the facts; it is an abuse of their true function to convert them into an excuse for evading that ascertainment. I think there was material on which it was open to the Judge to find that the payment in money from 1871 to 1909 was a mere incident which did not affect the principle upon which the payment was made, and that the tenure remained throughout an amani.

TARAK NATH ADHIKARI v. BHUBANESHWAR MITRA.

tenure. He has so found, in my opinion, not by way of mere surmise or conjecture, but upon a reasonable resolution of the probabilities of the case. That being so, we cannot disturb his conclusion, even if we would have arrived at a different conclusion had we been in his place. I think the learned Judge was mistaken in seeking to apply section 26 (3), which, in my opinion, has nothing whatever to do with this case; but that misconception in no way affects or vitiates his essential findings. The second appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

HOLDER OPPOSITE—PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 14—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Mortgage—Mortgagee purchasing property in execution of his money decree unconnected with mortgage.

Order XXXIV, rule 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure has repealed section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and under the present rule a mortgagee is competent to have his mortgaged property sold in satisfaction of any claim which he may have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage. [p. 988, col. 2.]

Civil Rule against the order of the District Judge of Midnapore, dated the 28th May 1914, reversing that of the Munsif of that District, dated March 17th 1914.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Mohini Mohon Chatterji), for the Petitioners.

Babu Baidyanath Dutt (with him Babu Mohini Nath Bose), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule on the opposite party to show cause why the order passed by the learned Judge in appeal should not be set aside on the ground that the sale was contrary to the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 14, and also on the ground that the sale was made without taking the permission of the Court which appointed a Receiver.

The second point (in the Rule) has not been argued by Dr. Ghose who appeared on behalf of the petitioner.

The petitioner is the judgment-debtor. Some of his properties have been sold and he complains against the sale. It appears that the opposite party had obtained a money-decree against the judgment-debtor and in execution of that money-decree, he sold and purchased certain properties which were mortgaged to him by the petitioner judgment-debtor under a certain mortgage-deed. The opposite party had also instituted a mortgage suit for the recovery of his mortgage-money under his mortgage-deed and while this mortgage suit was pending, he executed his money-decree and in execution of the decree purchased some of the mortgaged properties himself. The case for the petitioner is that notwithstanding the fact that an alteration in the law has been made by the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the present Civil Procedure Code, section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act should be given effect to. We find, however, that under the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagee could not bring the mortgaged property to sale in satisfaction of any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not, except by institution of a suit under section 67 of that Act. Order XXXIV, rule 14, has introduced a change, limiting the restriction on the mortgagee's right to sell the mortgaged properties to claims arising under the mortgage. It is clear, therefore, that the Code has repealed section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and in its place this present rule has been enacted. The first part of the section provided that a mortgagee should not bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. In so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property under a judgment unconnected with the mortgage-debt, the restriction has been considered inexpedient and has been removed. It follows, therefore, that a mortgagee is competent to have his mortgaged property sold in satisfaction of any claim which he may have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage.

ANANTHA DESIKACHARIAR v. VISWANADHA MUDALY.

For the above reasons, we discharge this Rule with costs.

Easement—Right to take water—Channel running through Government lands—Non-user for some years—Obstruction by trespasser—Injunction.

A person having had enjoyment of an easement for less than the statutory period can obtain an injunction against a trespasser. [p. 990, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiffs had been taking water with the permission of the Government to a tank along a channel which mostly ran through Government oramboke lands, but had for some years prior to suit not used this channel, on a suit being brought for declaration of their right against the defendants trespassers:

Held (1) that the non-user by the plaintiffs did not disentitle them to the relief claimed by them against the defendants who had no right either by grant or by prescription; [p. 990, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree restraining the defendants from interfering in any way with the plaintiffs in their enjoyment of the channel and of the water flowing in it. [p. 990, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot in Appeal Suit No. 96 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Ranipet in Original Suit No. 319 of 1902.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs were the inhabitants of Pundi village and the defendants of Chinnasamudram and Gudimallore in North Arcot. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were entitled to take water from river Palar through the Pundi channel. The defendants set up a grant from Government of the water of this channel and said that the plaintiffs had by non-user lost their rights. The District Munsif of Ranipet dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the channel was the channel of the plaintiffs and they were taking the flood water of the Palar river through this channel, but they had not taken the spring water of the said river for the last 30 years. He accordingly gave a decree declaring their right to take flood water, and dismissed the suit so far as the spring water was concerned, directing the plaintiffs to pay the defendants' costs as spring water was an important subject of discussion between the parties. The present appeal is against that decree and judgment.

Messrs. T. Rangachari and U. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants, contended that (1) the distinction drawn by the Subordinate Judge between flood water and spring water was unfounded, and it did not matter if the plaintiffs had failed to take the spring water through this channel for some time. (2) The Government was the owner of the bed of the river and the defendants could not object to the plaintiffs repairing the spring water channel in the bed of the river, to enable it to get into the channel. (3) The grant from Government, in favour of the defendants having been found against them, the suit ought to have been decreed wholly in the plaintiffs' favour.

Mr. K. Raja Aiyar (with him Messrs. Srinivasa Aiyangar and O. P. Venkataraghachari for Mr. V. C. Seshachariar), argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiffs dug the channel in the bed of the Palar river. that with the permission of the Government they have been taking water to the Pundi tank along a channel which mostly run through Government poramboke lands and which during the remainder of its course passed through channel poramboke lands. He has also founded that up to 1862, the plaintiffs took both spring and fresh water to their tank through this channel but that after 1862 and till 1892, they have not been shown to have removed the silt so as to enable spring water to pass through it. The defendants' case is that the Government made a grant of the right to take water through this channel to their fields as the plaintiffs did not require it any longer. The Subordinate Judge has found against this case. Apart from the fact that Exhibits III and IV purport to be grants to certain individuals only of the right in question, there is Exhibit G which shows that these grants were not acted upon, even assuming that it was open to a Head Assistant Collector to make such grants.

D. N. GHOSE v. POPAT NARAIN.

In this Court Mr. Raja Aiyar based his contention upon the ground that his clients acquired a prescriptive right against the plaintiffs by taking the spring water themselves through the channel to the exclusion of the plaintiffs. There has been no issue regarding this prescriptive right and we are at present unable to see how such a right could have been acquired. We have not been placed in possession of materials for arriving at a conclusion upon this point.

The next contention of the respondents' Vakil is that as his clients are in possession, the non-user by the plaintiffs disentitles them to ask for an injunction. We fail to see any force in this contention. The fact that the grant by the Government has not been availed of may enable the Government to revoke it, but so long as the grant subsists and the Government raises no objection to the intermittent use of the channel, we fail to see how the defendants who have no right either by grant or by prescription, can deny the right of the plaintiffs. The decisions in Achanna v. Venkamma (1) and Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (2) establish the proposition that as against a trespasser, a person having had enjoyment of an easement for less than the statutory period can obtain an injunction. In the present case, the position of the plaintiffs is very much stronger in that they have been continuously using the channel at least for taking flood water to their tank.

We are not able to follow the Subordinate Judge in regard to his classification of the easement claimed. We may observe that no question of easement really arises; but even granting that the right claimed is of that description, the right to take the spring water along the channel is not separable from the right to dig and take water from the bed of the river.

On the materials before us we are unable to find any right in the defendants to interfere with the plaintiffs' use of the water.

We must, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and grant a decree to the plaintiffs restraining the defendants from in any way interfering with the plaintiffs in their enjoyment of the channel and of the water flowing in it. In the absence of the Government, we are not in a position to make a declaration regarding the right of the plaintiffs to the channel in question.

The defendants must pay the costs of the plaintiffs in all the Courts.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal which arises out of a suit between a vendor and a purchaser of coal and one which should have been disposed of at the trial both on the question of liability and on the question of damages. However, a reference was directed.

More than once this Bench has protested against a reference being directed in cases of this nature. I wish again to repeat the protest, and I do this in the language of the Court of Appeal in England, when Lord Justice Bowen expressed his desire to protest against the melancholy spectacle which the case before him presented. He said, he "sometimes feared that profane persons might not be entirely wrong in complaining that the Courts of justice had, at least, some of the attributes of the Circumlocution Office. His Lordship had never said anything disrespectful of the Chancery Division, but it was a melancholy spectacle to see a common law cause which might have been heard in one day transformed and inflated into a Chancery suit which had lasted Heaven knew how long and was going to last Heaven knew how much longer. It must not be taken as a thing in which their Lordships were to acquiesce that in every case in the Chancery Division the Court ought to direct an inquiry as to damages instead of assessing the damages itself. Cases ought only to be referred to other persons to assess the damages where the inquiry involved questions of detail which it would be wasting the time of the Court to investigate." The opinion so expressed by Lord Justice Bowen was shared by Lord Justice Cotton and Lord Justice Fry, the latter of whom said that "he had more than once expressed his fears lest the practice of directing inquiries should lead to two trials when one was sufficient. Sending an action to a Referee might be necessary in some cases, but as a general rule his Lordship objected to the splitting up of the trial into two inquiries—first, as to the right, and, secondly, as to the amount of damages. This case might have been entirely disposed of by the Judge": Wallis v. Sayers (1). We share the opinion to which expression is given in Wallis v. Sayers (1), and the case amply illustrates the undesirability of a needless reference. I have described the nature of the suit. It was commenced a long time back; there was a decree establishing the right in 1913, and we are now in 1915 dealing with an appeal on exceptions to the Referee's report as to the quantum of damages. I trust that cases of this kind will not be referred to the Referee. It is not merely that this is an error of procedure, but where the question is one between a seller and a purchaser and the point in dispute may be readiness and willingness to sell, it is obviously of prime importance to know how the market has gone with reference to the contract price. In this case the matter went before the Referee. It did not take a very direct course, and I am not clear that the real points were properly appreciated, but the result has been that the plaintiff has failed to prove the amount of damages in respect of this particular coal, Lodna rubble, unless he can rely on an allegation in the defendant's statement of facts. But that allegation was made provisionally. The plaintiff never insisted upon it before the Referee as being a correct statement of the market rate, and it is obvious from the course which the case took before the Referee, that both parties gave the go-by to that statement and endeavoured to establish by evidence before him what the market rate was. The plaintiff has failed to prove that the market rate exceeded Rs. 1-12. Therefore, I think, Mr. Justice Chitty ought not to have interfered with the conclusion of the Referee.

This appeal is allowed, and the order of Mr. Justice Chitty is set aside with costs of this appeal and the exceptions before Mr. Justice Chitty.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 141—Adverse possession against female holder—Suit by reversioner, whether barred.

Article 141 of the Limitation Act gives a fresh starting point to the reversioner on the death of the female limited owner, and a suit brought by the reversioner will not be barred even though the female owner was not in possession within 12 years before her death. [p. 992, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 277 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Coondapore, in Original Suit No. 242 of 1911.

SHRINIVASA RAYA v. RAMAPPA HEBBARA.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Sundara Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. One Subroya Udupa died in the year 1876 leaving a daughter Venkamma, and daughter-in-law, Satyabhama, the widow of this predeceased son, Krishna Udupa. Venkamma adopted Subroya Adiga, who conveyed the suit properties to the appellant by a registered deed of sale, dated 5th January 1911. Satyabhama sold the suit properties to the 1st defendant's father and died in the year 1901. Venkamma died in the year 1907 and the appellant sues to recover possession of the property, on the ground that he represents the adopted son of Venkamma who as daughter's son of the last male holder became entitled to the properties on her death.

Both the lower Courts have found that Satyabhama took adversely to Venkamma and that her adverse possession commenced in the year 1876. They dismissed plaintiff's suit as barred by limitation on the ground that adverse possession against Venkamma barred the reversioner also.

We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Courts cannot be supported on this point. In considering the authorities on the subject they have failed to notice that while under the Limitation Act of 1859 dispossession of a female owner caused time to run not only as against her but also against the reversioners, Act IX of 1871 and the subsequent Acts gave the reversioners a fresh starting point from the date of the death of the female limited owner.

The present case clearly falls within the ruling of the Privy Council in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), where their Lordships held that Article 144 has no application to suits governed by Article 141 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act.

In Venkataramayya v. Venkatalakshamma (2), it was held that under Article 141 of the Limitation Act the reversioners had 12 years from the date of the death of the last male holder's daughter. Though the Allahabad High Court was at one time disposed to treat the decision in Ram Kali v. Kedar Nath (3) as overruled by Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (4) and to treat adverse possession as against the female heir as barring reversioners, that view has not found favour after the decision of the Privy Council in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1). In Amrit Dhar v. Bindesri Prasad (5) and Jhamman Kunwar v. Tiloki (6) their Lordships after distinguishing Lachhan Kunwar's case (4), held on the authority of the decision of the Privy Council in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), that Article 141 gave a fresh starting point to the reversioner on the death of the widow and that a suit brought by the reversioner will not be barred even though the widow was not in possession within 12 years before her death.

Reference has been made by the respondent's Vakil to Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (4) where their Lordships of the Privy Council inclined to the view that adverse possession against the widow would bar the reversioners, but as pointed out in Venkataramayya v. Venkatalakshamma (2) the rights of the reversioners had become barred under Act XIV of 1859 before the provisions of Act IX of 1871 had come into force. Similarly in Mahabir Pershad v. Adhikari Koer (7) adverse possession had ripened before the passing of the Act IX of 1871. Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothun Mohun Goswami (8) was a case where the plaintiff's mother representing the estate brought a suit which was dismissed as barred and the decree was held to be binding on her son as res judicata. In Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (9) the widows being only entitled to maintenance had no life-interest in the estate and adverse possession commenced from the death of Bhan Nath Singh, who was a member of an undivided Hindu family.

We are of opinion that the suit is not barred by limitation and reverse the decree of the lower Court and remand the appeal for disposal on the other issues raised. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 344—Remand, when ordered—Practice.

A remand to custody should not ordinarily be ordered under section 344, Criminal Procedure Code, without first recording some evidence, where such evidence is available, to show that good ground exists for believing the accused person to have committed a non-bailable offence. [p. 993, col. 2.]

Where after one remand the accused is again brought up, some direct evidence of the guilt of the accused should be required to justify the refusal of bail and with each remand the necessity for producing such evidence increases. [p. 993, col. 2.]

Ponnusami Chetti v. Queen, 6 M. 69; 2 Weir 413, followed.

Miscellaneous petition against the order of the Sessions Judge, rejecting an application for bail.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been chalaned with four other persons for kidnapping a girl aged 14 years from lawful custody, a non-bailable offence punishable under section 363, Indian Penal Code. The first information was laid on the 9th ultimo, but only two persons, one unnamed, are therein said to have committed the crime. The petitioner was arrested on the 25th ultimo, though this fact has improperly been omitted from the chalan. He was placed before the Magistrate on the 26th idem along with three of his co-accused, but was at once remanded to Jail because one of the accused persons had not been arrested and was believed to have absconded. On the 8th current a farther postponement to the 22nd current was ordered and now the case stands fixed for the 6th proximo. No evidence whatever has been recorded to show that a prima facie case exists against the petitioner, and his mother now puts in an affidavit complaining that she is in serious distress, as the petitioner is the only member of the family who earns anything for its support. The family is said to consist of the petitioner's wife and two small children in addition to his mother, the petitioner being a bookbinder's employee earning Rs. 15 per mensem.

It does not appear that the Magistrate has been moved to grant bail. An application to the Sessions Judge has been rejected, partly on this ground and partly because the Judge had other work to do before leaving his headquarters for the Christmas holidays and could not spare time to consider any applications.

It is, I trust, unusual for a Sessions Judge to treat an application for bail with such scant consideration as has been meted out to the petitioner's. The Magistrate's order-sheet does not show that he was asked to release the petitioner on bail, but I am told that he was moved to do so and declined to grant the prayer. It ought to be understood by all Magistrates that remands to custody should not ordinarily be ordered under section 344, Criminal Procedure Code, without first recording some evidence, where such is already available, to show that good ground exists for believing the accused person to have committed a non-bailable offence. The ordinary course is to examine a Police Officer to ascertain that the Police possess information, they believe to be trustworthy, that an offence has been committed and that the accused person was concerned in its commission. When after one remand the accused is again brought up, some direct evidence of the guilt of the accused should be required to justify the refusal of bail and with each remand the necessity for producing such evidence increases. This is the view expressed by Turner, C. J., and Kernan, J. in Ponnusami Chetti v. Queen (1), and I agree with it. In the present case the petitioner has already been over four weeks under arrest and almost a fortnight more must elapse before the trial can begin. The Courts are now closed for the Christmas holidays and there may be difficulty in moving the trying Magistrate to pass an order in writing either granting or refusing bail. It further appears that innocent persons are suffering by reason of the petitioner's incarceration. In these circumstances I direct that the petitioner be released on furnishing a bond in Rs. 50 with one surety in a like sum for his appearance before the trying Magistrate on the 6th proximo. The surety must be

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for Opponent No. 3.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani (Assistant Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. This is an application to revise an order of discharge made by the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

The accused was charged with cheating the Karachi Municipality.

He executed a sale-deed to the Karachi Municipality for certain land and received the price. It was subsequently discovered that the land was mortgaged by the accused and the other members of his family were interested in it.

Mr. Rupchand refers to the Explanation to section 415 that a dishonest concealment of fact is a deception and argues that the accused dishonestly concealed the fact of the mortgage and the fact that he was member of a joint Hindu family. But no concealment is dishonest unless there is a legal obligation to disclose. A defect in title has been held to be a material defect in the property under section 55 (1) (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, Haji Essa v. Dayabai (1). There is no duty on the seller to disclose these, unless the buyer could not with ordinary care discover them. The Municipality could easily have ascertained the existence of a prior mortgage and knew that the seller was a Hindu.

Mr. Rupchand then relies on the express covenant of title in the sale-deed, but the representation contained in this covenant was not that which induced the Municipality to agree to buy the property. The agreement had been effected before the sale-deed was signed. The effect of this covenant was merely to give the Municipality a right to sue for damages if the title proved to be defective.

The cheating must refer to some false representation which induced the Municipality to agree to buy the land. As to such representation there is only the evidence of one witness, the land clerk, and as he is not supported by the correspondence, I think the Magistrate was right not to act upon his evidence.

Mr. Rupchand refers to illustration (1) to section 415, but that refers to a case where the seller has no title and his conduct in selling amounts to deception. That is not the case here. The law on this point is, I think, correctly stated in the case of Emperor v. Bishen Das (2).

RANGOON—RESPONDENT.*

Professional misconduct—Pleader accepting fees for whole case and failing to appear after few hearings—Presumption—Terms of engagement—Procedure.

Where an Advocate receives instructions from his lay client or his friends, it is incumbent on him to see that the terms of his engagement are clear and are understood by his client; and in the absence of a special contract to the contrary, the fee should be presumed to have been taken for the whole case. It is desirable that an Advocate should take a note in writing from the person paying the fee of the terms of the engagement and should make a similar note on the receipt for fee given by him. [p. 996, col. 2.]

Where a case takes more hearings than anticipated by an Advocate at the time of his engagement and he refuses to appear in the case unless he is paid a further fee he is guilty of professional misconduct. [p. 997, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—The respondent, a first Grade Pleader of this Court, is charged with professional misconduct, the charge being that he having received from the complainant sums aggregating to Rs. 1,150 as fees for defending Maung Ok Gyi and Ma San Me in a criminal case before the Senior Magistrate, Mandalay, after appearing on two occasions when the case was not heard, failed without any good cause to make further appearance on behalf of his clients or to make proper arrangements for the conduct of their defence by another Advocate:

The petitioner, Po Tin, is the brother-in-law of Ok Gyi and the husband of Ma San Me. His case is that on the 7th September he engaged the respondent to defend Ok Gyi in the criminal case for a fee of Rs. 900, the respondent to pay his own expenses, and paid him Rs. 400 on that day. Respondent gave petitioner a receipt (Exhibit A) for "Rs. 400 on account of criminal case Mandalay, balance Rs. 500." A few days later he engaged the respondent to appear also for Ma San Me for a fee of Rs. 250. The case was fixed for the 23rd September. The respondent attended in the Court but the case was postponed until the 30th September, because one of the other accused was not present. The respondent attended on the 30th September, but the case was again postponed for the same reason as before until Monday, the 12th October. On 12th October the case was postponed until 23rd October for the same reason as before. The evidence for the prosecution was taken on the 23rd, 24th and 26th October. On 27th October Ok Gyi with others was charged and San Me was discharged; and the case was postponed until 24th November.

The respondent did not appear on the 12th October or any subsequent date, his case being that he was engaged to go to Mandalay on two occasions or for two hearings for the said sum of Rs. 1,150. On the 20th or 21st October the respondent left for Ceylon without leaving any one to look after this case for him.

On the morning of Sunday, 11th October, the petitioner arrived in Rangoon, and with Po Kun went to the respondent's house to pay him the balance of the Rs. 1,150 which remained unpaid, viz., Rs. 100. The respondent was out, did not return to his house until 1-30 or 2 p. m. The petitioner went off to catch the midday train for Mandalay and left the money with Po Kun, who paid it to the respondent at a time when it was impossible for the respondent to have got to Mandalay by the next morning in time for the case. The respondent gave Po Kun a receipt (Exhibit B) for "the fees of Rs. 1,150, as agreed upon for two appearances only." The petitioner in his supplementary petition says that on the 12th October he was waiting for the respondent who had promised to come; and in his evidence he first stated that his interview took place some days before 12th October. He subsequently admitted that he was in Rangoon on the 11th October; that he missed the midday train and arrived in Mandalay on Monday the 12th to find that the case had been adjourned. And Po Kun bears out petitioner's first story and says that petitioner himself paid the money to respondent on the 12th October. It is clear that petitioner and Po Kun are unreliable. The respondent in his written explanation says he was paid the balance a day or two after the second adjournment. It is clear, however, that this money was paid on the day before the third adjournment, i.e., on the 11th October. The respondent states that Po Kun paid him the balance of the fees, Rs. 1,150, and tried to induce him to go up again in the case; that the respondent said he would go upon a reduced fee, he thinks it was Rs. 250 and that Po Kun said he would try and persuade the clients to pay it. Apparently it must have been contemplated either that the case would be adjourned or that the respondent should go up as soon as possible. The petitioner came again to Rangoon before the 23rd October but he learned that the respondent had gone to Ceylon. From the statements made by the respondent in answer to the Court, the facts of the case, I think, are these. The petitioner went to engage the respondent to defend Ok Gyi in the criminal case and asked what his fee would be. Ok Gyi was accused of being in possession of stolen property. The respondent elicited the particulars of the case from the petitioner and learned that none of the stolen property was found on the accused or in his house. The respondent, therefore, thought there was a good chance of the accused not being called upon to enter upon his defence and in that case one trip to Mandalay only would be necessary and that two trips, one for the case for the prosecution and one for the case for the defence, would in any case see the case through. The respondent states that neither party contemplated his making a trip to Mandalay when the case was not taken up. He put it to the petitioner that the case would take two days' hearing, i.e., would require two trips to Mandalay, and he agreed to defend Ok Gyi for a fee of Rs. 900. Nothing was said at the interview of the 7th September about any further fees being payable in the event of the case necessitating more than two trips to Mandalay. And the receipt for "Rs. 400 on account of the criminal case Mandalay, balance Rs. 500" would show that Rs. 900 was the fee for the whole case.

The case set up by the respondent in his written answer that there was an agreement for two visits only, is certainly not made out. And the respondent was ill-advised in calling his three clerks and the client, Oung Dun, to prove statements by the petitioner that the petitioner had engaged the respondent for two trips. I attach no weight to the evidence of these witnesses; and if the petitioner did ever speak of two trips in connection with this contract, he must have meant that the respondent agreed to go up to Mandalay not only for the prosecution but also for the defence and to see the case through.

It is not too much to expect that statement made by Advocates to the Court should be made with the utmost candour. If the respondent in his written explanation had stated the case in its true light, the matter would have borne a very different complexion and this hearing might have been obviated.

In this country where Advocates receive instruction from the lay clients themselves (or their friends), it is incumbent on the Advocate to see that the terms of his engagement are clear and are understood by his client. And in the absence of any special contract, the fee must be taken for the whole case. The proof of the terms of the contract should not have to depend upon the evidence of the Advocate's clerks, whose evidence is, as a rule, valueless. The witness-box is not a proper place for the lawyer's clerks. There is no reason that I can see why a note in the writing of the person paying the fee should not be taken by the Advocate and also made on the receipt given by him to the client, of the terms of the engagement.

In the present case the respondent agreed to defend Ok Gyi and Ma San Me in a criminal case at Mandalay for the sum of Rs. 1,150. He calculated that two trips would see the case through. The petitioner who was less concerned with adjournments than with hearing and result of the case, engaged the respondent to appear at the hearing of the case, and if in order to be present at the hearing the respondent had to make preliminary trips to Mandalay, the fee would include these trips.

The risk of making a trip to Mandalay and the case being adjourned fell on the respondent. He did his best to provide against this happening, but circumstances were against him; and the contract as it turned out was an unprofitable one.

The respondent told his clients that two trips would be necessary. Neither party contemplated more than two trips being made. The respondent made two ineffectual trips on account of adjournments and refused to make any more trips except upon payment of a reduced fee of Rs. 250, that is to say, that the respondent after receiving his fee refused to appear further in the case, and thereby committed an act of professional misconduct. But I am of opinion that he honestly thought that he was entitled to demand an additional reduced fee; and consequently no further action is necessary.

TWOMEY, J.—The petitioner, Po Tin, and his witness, Po Kun, have not given a true account of the incident of 11th October when the last instalment of the fee was paid at Rangoon. These men are untrustworthy. But it does not follow that we must accept the evidence of the respondent's clerks as to the original arrangement of September 7th. They would make out that there was a clear stipulation well understood by the petitioner that in any event the respondent was to go only twice to Mandalay. This is in direct conflict with the petitioner's statement that the fee of Rs. 1,150 was to cover the whole case irrespective of the number of trips that might be necessary. The truth is discernible in the documentary exhibits and the respondent's own admissions, and I agree with my learned colleague in rejecting the evidence of the lawyer's clerks and the client Aung Dun. The receipt given on 7th September showing a lump-sum fee and a balance of Rs. 500 still due tells strongly in support of the petitioner's version which is, moreover, in accordance with probabilities. The respondent admits that neither he nor the petitioner contemplated the possibility of the respondent going to Mandalay for mere adjournments. But, if the respondent was engaged specifically for two trips only, the possibility of adjournments would almost certainly have been considered. The respondent knows that Magistrates' cases up country are apt to hang fire from one cause or another, especially when as in the petitioner's case there are several accused and when the witnesses have to come from various other districts. This was clearly a case that was prone to suffer adjournments. In such a case it is hardly conceivable that a Rangoon lawyer would be engaged without the question of adjournments being considered. The fact that this matter was not discussed with the petitioner, points only to the conclusion that the respondent was engaged for the whole case. It is urged that if an Advocate goes to Mandalay his expenses are just as great when there is a mere adjournment as when there is an effective hearing and, therefore, the respondent would necessarily fix a maximum number of trips with reference to the amount of fee paid. But this would not be so obvious to the petitioner as to the respondent. It can be argued with an equal force that the petitioner would not have engaged the respondent and paid the fee if he had been told that the respondent proposed to pay only two visits to Mandalay, however the case might go, and that an additional fee would be payable for any further attendance in the event of the respondent, owing to defective information or otherwise, going to Mandalay twice for mere adjournments. So far as I can see the petitioner had no inkling that he was liable to be treated in this manner. It is in the last degree unlikely that he would have agreed to such an arrangement. It clearly should have been explained to him at the beginning, and I should have expected to see a note of the fact on the receipt given on 7th September. The truth appears to be that the respondent, relying on inadequate information about the case, was satisfied in his own mind that two trips would see it through and that he could safely take the fee of Rs. 1,150 for the whole case. Afterwards when his calculation miscarried and two trips to Mandalay went in mere adjournments he seems to have persuaded himself that the number of trips was an essential term of the contract with the petitioner instead of being merely the basis on which the the lump-sum fee was concluded.

I am content to accept my learned colleague's finding that there was no bad faith on the part of the respondent. I would attribute to faulty memory the respondent's statement that the petitioner was made to understand that the fee of Rs. 900 was "for two occasions, viz., two visits to Mandalay." I agree that no further action need be taken in the matter.

Order accordingly.

Appeal against the decision of the Sessions Judge, Larkana.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We have no doubt that the facts are as found by the Sessions Judge. The four accused attacked the deceased with lathis and beat him with such brutality that he died. Those facts are proved by the evidence of eye-witnesses and the dying declaration of the deceased.

The Sessions Judge has found that the accused did not intend to cause the death of the deceased—section 300 (1), and he does not find that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death—section 300 (3). He has nevertheless convicted them of murder as he considers that the act is covered by section 300 (4). We do not think that section 300 (4) applies to cases where there is an intention to cause bodily injury to any particular person. It refers primarily to cases where there is no such intention but the accused has knowledge that the act involves imminent risk of human life, according to the degree of the risk the offence is either culpable homicide not amounting to murder under section 299 (c) or murder under section 300 (3). As pointed out in Reg. v. Govinda (1) furious driving and firing at a mark near the public road are instances of offences under section 299 (c) and 300 (4). We differ from the case of Hanuman v. Emperor (2) where section 300 (4) was applied to a case similar to the present.

The Sessions Judge also refers to the case of Elem Molla v. Emperor (3) which was also a case of brutal assault with lathis. The Judge there held that the accused "either intended to cause his death or that they attacked him in such a brutal manner regardless of the consequences, well knowing that they would be likely to cause his death". On the first hypothesis the offence was of course murder under section 300 (1). If the second hypothesis is intended to apply section 300 (4), then the same criticism applies to this case as to Hanuman v. Emperor (2). And if it is intended to apply section 300 (2), then we differ also for the material words in the part are "the person to whom the harm is caused". The essence of section 300 (2) is that the particular person injured is suffering from some infirmity known to the accused which would make his death a probable result of the harm caused. Apart from this special case, brutal assaults such as the present do not ordinarily amount to murder unless the accused intends to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death: Emperor v. Hashim (4).

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 495—Revision—Records called for by Sessions Judge on his own motion and returned without interference—Subsequent application by complainant to re-open the case—Duty of Sessions Judge.

A Sessions Judge, who himself calls for the records of a case in which the accused has been discharged and returns the same with the remark that in his opinion there is no cause for interference, is not precluded but on the other hand is bound to entertain an application for reopening the case, presented by the complainant. He cannot reject such application on the ground of his previous non-interference on his own motion.

Review of the order of the third Additional Magistrate of Nyaunglebin, dated the 28th of May 1915, passed in Criminal Trial No. 22 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—Mg. Tun Myaing prosecuted four persons under sections 379 and 381 of the Indian Penal Code before the third Additional Magistrate of Nyaunglebin, who on 28th May 1915 discharged them all.

On the first July, on perusal of the statement of the cases dealt with by the Criminal Courts in the Pegu District during May, the Sessions Judge called for the proceedings in the case. On the 12th July the Sessions Judge ordered the record to be returned, "on a perusal of the record no cause appearing for interference."

On the same day an application was filed by an Advocate on behalf of Mg. Tun Myaing asking the Sessions Judge to re-open the case in which the Magistrate had discharged the accused, and the Judge called for the proceedings. On 19th July he returned the petition to be presented to the Chief Court as the case had been before him in revision. The application was then filed in this Court. I doubt whether the order returning the petition for presentation to this Court was correct, as I know of no provision for such a course. I think the correct procedure would have been to deal with the petition, and if it was rejected leave the petitioner to take any further steps which he might be advised to take.

I think, however, that the Sessions Judge may have regarded a consideration of the petition on its merits as being of the nature of a review of his order of 12th July returning the proceedings, and, therefore, have thought that he was not competent to enter upon it.

Though, however, a mere perusal of the record may not have disclosed sufficient cause to the Sessions Judge to interfere on his own motion, when the complainant came forward and alleged specific reasons for interfering I do not think the Sessions Judge was precluded from hearing him, and, if the arguments led him to do so, from altering his view. I think, therefore, that he should have heard complainant's Advocate, and if he was of opinion that there were grounds of re-opening the case against any of the accused, he should have given him or them an opportunity to show cause against that being done. The application will, therefore, be returned to the Sessions Judge for disposal accordingly.

Application returned.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439
(3)—High Court's power to enhance sentence beyond

In cases of convictions by second or third class Magistrates, the High Court has power to enhance the sentence beyond the power of the trying Magistrate.

The power of enhancement of sentence conferred upon the High Court by section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, is limited only by clause (3) of that section which clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrates under section 32 of the same Code but lays down the general rule that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under section 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that may be inflicted by a Presidency or a first Class Magistrate. [p. 1000, col. 2.]

The practice of this Court to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on the basis of the facts found by the lower Court, would not be followed when it is proposed to enhance a sentence beyond the powers of the trying Magistrate. In such cases both the conviction and the sentence are open to revision. [p. 1000, col. 2.]

Emperor v. Chinto Bhairava, 10 Bom. L. R. 93; 7 Cr. L. J. 119; 32 B. 162, referred to.

Mr. E. Raymond, (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate, Karachi, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

The accused has been convicted of the theft of five camels worth Rs. 270 by the 2nd Class Magistrate, Manjhand, and has been sentenced to five months' rigorous imprisonment.

The District Magistrate recommends that the sentence be enhanced.

The prosecution was instituted before a Magistrate who under section 32 is not empowered to pass a sentence of imprisonment exceeding 6 months. But the accused cannot on that account claim that the sentence should not exceed six months, for the second Class Magistrate might under section 349 have referred the case to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or District Magistrate for severer punishment. In that case the conviction would have been that of the Sub-Divisional or District Magistrate and it might be contended that if the conviction of the accused is by a second Class Magistrate the sentence cannot be enhanced to more than six months. But the power of enhancement conferred upon the High Court by section 439 is limited only by clause (3) of that section. That clause does not regard the difference in the powers of trying Magistrates under section 32 of the Code, but lays down the general rule that in the case of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under section 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first Class. This, therefore, gives us power to enhance the sentence of imprisonment to two years.

It has been the invariable practice of this Court to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on the basis of the facts found by the lower Court. This is also the practice of the Bombay High Court, Emperor v. Chinto Bhairava (1). But I think that that the practice should not be followed when it is proposed to enhance a sentence beyond the limit of the powers of the trying Magistrate. The Legislature regards a conviction by a second Class Magistrate as an insufficient basis for a sentence of more than six months' imprisonment. Therefore before the Court of revision enhances the sentence beyond that term, it should satisfy itself that the conviction is correct. I, therefore, treat both the conviction and the sentence in the present case as open to revision.

There is no doubt the conviction is correct for the accused pleaded guilty. As to the sentence there is no evidence of the previous conviction to which the Magistrate refers, but having regard to the value of the property stolen and the necessity for deterrent sentences in cases of cattle theft, I would enhance the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for nine months.

BOYD, A. J. C.—I concur.

Sentence enhanced.

As there is no abatement of a criminal case on the death of the complainant, a fresh complaint on the same facts will not lie but the old complaint must be treated as pending and proceeded with to its disposal.

Petitions, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Pattukottah in Calendar Case No. 341 of 1915, dated the 22nd June 1915

Mr. A. Ramaswami Mudaliar, for Mr. T. V. Gokalswami Mudaliar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandrier, for the Complainant.

ORDER.—The order of the second Class Magistrate of Pattukottah, dated 12th April 1915, purporting to dispose of Calendar Case No. 1308 of 1913 runs as follows:—
“In this case, while the trial was proceeding the complainant is dead, and so it abates and is closed without any judgment.”

There is no abatement of a criminal case on the death of complainant and the order is illegal and of no effect whatever. Calendar Case No. 1308 of 1913 must be regarded as still pending.

The subsequent complaint presented by Singaravelu Thevan, which has been taken on file and numbered as Calendar Case No. 341 of 1915, admittedly related to exactly the same facts, as those which formed the subject-matter of the Calendar Case No. 1308 of 1913. It should, therefore, have been dismissed under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Instead of this the Magistrate directed that it should be filed and process issued under section 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Under section 423 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, read with section 439

RAM HAKKH v. EMPEROR.

The Code of Criminal Procedure, I reverse that order and direct the dismissal of Singaravelu Thevan's complaint. I further direct that Calendar Case No. 1308 of 1913 be restored to file and that the Magistrate do proceed to dispose of it according to law. The case against accused Nos. 1, 2, 8 and 9 has, of course, already been disposed of by their discharge.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263 (h)—Summary trial—Conviction, reasons for, what to show.

In cases tried summarily under section 260, Criminal Procedure Code, the statement of reasons for a conviction which the Magistrate is bound to record under section 263 clause (h), should present a clear statement of the facts constituting the offence and should show also that each of the ingredients for a conviction has been considered and held proved by the Magistrate. [p. 1002, col. 1.]

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We have carefully studied the magisterial record in this case and are unable to extract from it a clear view of the facts. The conviction is based upon the evidence of two witnesses, Murdanali and Fateh Mahomed, Police Constable. Murdanali, the Magistrate says, saw the accused, a shunting porter, tear a bag of sugar and take some out of it. But it does not appear whether this bag was on the ground or on the waggon. He does not say that the accused after taking the sugar filled the sugar that he took into another bag. He says that he chased him but the accused got on his engine and went away. Apparently the accused knew that he was pursued and, therefore, escaped on an engine. Then he says that a minute or two after he caught the accused with sugar. It does not appear where he caught the accused, i.e., whether the accused was then on the engine or on the ground. Nor it is clear what is meant by the expression 'caught the accused with sugar.' Does this mean that the accused had a small bag of sugar in his hands or in his pocket at the time or that the accused was merely standing near the place where the stolen sugar was or that he was merely standing near the original bag of sugar? The other witness, Fateh Mahomed, merely says that the bag of sugar was with the accused when he seized him. Does this mean the original bag or does it refer to some fresh bag in which the accused had placed the sugar? Does it mean that the accused had the sugar in his hands or in his pocket or only that he was standing near it? It seems improbable that the accused had retained possession of sugar if he had been seen and chased by Murdanali. The judgment is so ambiguous that it is not clear that possession of stolen sugar by the accused was proved.

The record in summary cases is very brief, and, therefore, it has been repeatedly held that the statement of reasons for a conviction which the Magistrate is bound to record under section 263, clause (h), Criminal Procedure Code, should present a clear statement of the facts constituting the offence and should show that each of the ingredients for a conviction has been considered and held proved by the Magistrate. See the cases of Queen-Empress v. Shidgauda (1) and Queen-Empress v. Mukundi Lal (2).

The Magistrate's record is imperfect and it does not disclose sufficient materials to support the conviction.

We, therefore, reverse the conviction and sentence and order the accused to be set at liberty.

Conviction and sentence reversed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Ch. XII, ss. 145, 522—Magistrate's power to dispossess a person and place another in possession—Revision.

There is no provision in Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code which gives a first Class Magistrate power to oust one person and to place another person in possession. The only provision of the Code which entitles a Magistrate to dispossess a person of property and re-place him by another person who is entitled, is section 522 of the Code, and for the purpose of exercising powers therein granted, it is necessary that there should have been a conviction of an offence. An order of a District Magistrate declining to carry out such an order passed by a first Class Magistrate is not open to revision. [p. 1003, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Bijnor.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Emperor.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has come to this Court on revision in the following circumstances. There is a certain house which is in dispute between him and the opposite party and he applied to a Magistrate to take action under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the 5th of December 1914, the Magistrate passed an order under section 145 calling upon the parties concerned in the dispute to attend his Court and to put in written statements of their respective claims. The Magistrate proceeded to make his enquiry and he came to the conclusion that Tulshi Ram had been wrongfully dispossessed on the 25th of November 1914 by the opposite party. He accordingly treated him as having been in possession on the date of his order of the 5th of December 1914, acting under the first of the provisos of clause 4 of section 145. He thereupon passed an order under clause 6 of that section declaring Tulshi Ram to be entitled to possession of the house until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and he forbade all disturbances of such possession until such eviction. So far the order of the Magistrate appears to have been good and well within his jurisdiction. He, however, added the following sentence: "The possession of the house in question will be given to Tulshi Ram through the Police." This latter portion of his order is based upon no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure of which I am aware. Chapter XII nowhere gives a first Class Magistrate any such power as to oust one person and to place another person in possession. The only provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure which entitles a Magistrate to dispossess a person of property and re-place him by another person who is entitled, is section 522 of the Code, and for the purpose of exercising powers therein granted it is necessary that there should have been a conviction of an offence. This latter portion, therefore, of the Magistrate's order, that the possession of the house could be given to Tulshi Ram through the Police, appears to be ultra vires completely. Tulshi Ram in good faith applied to the Magistrate to enforce this portion of the order. The Magistrate sent on the petition to the Superintendent of Police asking that it might be done and the Deputy Superintendent of Police might be deputed to see the order carried out. The Superintendent of Police referred the matter to the District Magistrate, pointing out that the order should have come from the District Magistrate and expressing his readiness to maintain order and peace. He seems in his order of reference to have assumed that the dispossession was to be carried out by some Revenue Official. On this the District Magistrate passed an order which is the subject of revision; that order being "I am not going to order actual possession to be given by the Police." In other words the District Magistrate, who is the district head of the Police, declined to carry out the order of the first Class Magistrate that the opposite party should be dispossessed by the Police. It is against this order that Tulshi Ram has come to this Court in revision. In the circumstances of the case the order of the first Class Magistrate being, as I have pointed out, ultra vires, the District Magistrate's order declining to allow the Police to be utilised for the purpose of carrying out an illegal order is, in my opinion a very proper order indeed, in which I would not interfere.

It seems to me that it is an order which is not open to revision by this Court at all. It is curious that under section 145 of the Code the Magistrate is allowed to treat a person, who has been wrongly and forcibly dispossessed, as having been in actual possession on the date on which he passed his initial order under clause 1 of the section, while the section provides no machinery under which or through which the Court may proceed to remove the wrongdoer from possession and put the other man in his place. As far as I can see the remedy for Tulshi Ram in the present case is to make a complaint in respect of his wrongful and forcible dispossession and to prosecute the other side, and if the Magistrate should convict, then it would be open to him to apply to the Magistrate to exercise the powers granted by section 522 of the Code. It is quite clear that in proceeding under section 145, as the law stands, it is impossible for the Magistrate to forcibly turn out one person and place another in possession of the property. The application is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The bailiff of the Civil Court, Larkana, attached in the house of the accused an article called either "Batli" or "Bati" which, the Magistrate says, is a cooking utensil. The accused snatched the utensil from the bailiff's hand and for so doing has been convicted of the offence of theft. The defence of the accused is that the cooking utensil was not liable to attachment. As to this the Magistrate says that "the point is a law point and the accused instead of taking the law into his own hands could very well have urged it in a competent Court". The criticism would have been just if the accused had been prosecuted under section 186, Indian Penal Code, for unlawfully obstructing the bailiff in discharge of his public functions. In that case, provided the bailiff was acting in good faith, the legality of the attachment would be immaterial. See the case of Queen-Empress v. Poomalai Udayan (1). But the accused is prosecuted for the offence of theft, it is for the prosecution to show that he was acting dishonestly and if the circumstances show that the accused was acting in the assertion of a bona fide, claim of right a dishonest intention cannot be attributed to him. Here the accused claims that the utensil was not liable to attachment and his claim was not only bona fide but is well founded, having regard to section 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think there was no dishonest intention on the part of the accused and, therefore, reverse the conviction and sentence and order that the fine, if paid should be refunded.

Conviction and sentence reversed.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 464 OF 1915.

CASE REFERRED No. 53 OF 1915.

October 11, 1915.

Present:—Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt.

In re HASSAN SAHIB—ACCUSED.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884),—Ootacamund Municipality By-law No. 54—"Other building material", meaning of—Sand, if included in the term.

In By-law No. 54 of the Ootacamund Municipality the expression "the other building material" must be "ejusdem generis" to bricks, stone and road metal in its potentially deleterious effect on the public thoroughfare. Therefore it does not include sand. [p. 1005, col. 1.]

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge of Coimbatore Division, in his letter D. No. 6094, dated the 23rd July 1915.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—This reference involves the question of whether sand falls within the category of "other building material" in By-law No. 45 of the Ootacamund Municipality.

The By-Law runs as follows:—"Every vehicle used within the Municipality for the conveyance of bricks, stone, metal, or other building materials shall be so constructed that the contents shall be duly secured therein during transit through the public streets. Owners of vehicles failing to secure such conditions shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 20."

The majority of the Bench were of opinion that sand should be regarded as "other building material". One member of the Bench, Mr. Parsons, in a very able minute of dissent took the opposite view, in which he is supported by the Sessions Judge, who has referred the case under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The question is one by no means easy of decision: but on the whole it appears to me that the view of the dissenting Magistrate is correct. As has been pointed out, sand may be used for many purposes unconnected with building and in the present case there appears to be no evidence to show for what purpose the sand in the cart was destined. Apart from this, the object of the section is obviously the protection of the public streets from the obstruction caused by the accidental falling out of the contents of moving carts. In the case of bricks, stone and metal (by which is presumably meant road-metal) this obstruction is obvious, inevitable and a serious nuisance. So much cannot be predicated of sand. No doubt the upsetting of a cartload of sand in the road would be a nuisance and obstructive to traffic, but the falling of sand in such small quantities as would be due to the absence of a back board to the cart (the defect in the present case) could hardly be either. I think the dissenting Magistrate was right in holding that the "other building material" must be "ejusdem generis" to bricks, stone, and road-metal in its potentially deleterious effect on the public thoroughfares, and that sand does not satisfy this requirement.

The conviction and sentence are reversed and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

In cases triable by a Judge with the aid of Jurors and of Assessors respectively, a joint trial for different offences is not illegal under section 269 (3) of the Code. [p. 1006, col. 1.]

There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure authorising or forbidding a Judge to allow consultation between the Assessors: a Judge is entitled to have before him each Assessor's individual and independent opinion, and is not guilty of an irregularity if he refuses such consultation. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

A Judge's omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the failure to put in evidence an Inquest Report, when that is material for the case, and his omission to mention the existence of enmity between the accused and the prosecution witnesses, when there is clear evidence to support it, are misdirections which vitiate the conviction. Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division, in Case No. 124 of the Calendar for 1914

FACTS.—Twelve persons were originally charged before the Additional Sessions Judge for dacoity, house-breaking by night and dacoity with grievous hurt and dacoity with murder. The first three offences were triable by a Jury, while dacoity with murder was triable by the Judge with the aid of Assessors. The Additional Sessions Judge asked the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the other charges and proceed with the graver charges under section 396 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but this procedure was not adopted and the accused were tried on all the charges at one trial. The Additional Sessions Judge summed up the case to the Jury (five gentlemen), and at first asked their opinions as Assessors. One Assessor was not prepared to give his opinion as to which of the accused took part in the dacoity. The other four Assessors were equally divided in their opinion. After consultation, however, a verdict was brought in by them as Jury that three of the accused were guilty and two not guilty. The Judge convicted the accused Nos. 1, 2, 4, 9 and 11 of dacoity with murder and sentenced them to transportation for life. They appealed.

Messrs. E. R. Osborne and Narasimha-chariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The accused have been tried by a Jury for an offence punishable under section 395, Indian Penal Code, and by the Additional Sessions Judge with the aid of the Jurors as Assessors for offences punishable under sections 396 and 397. First, 2nd, 4th, 9th and 11th accused have been convicted of these offences and appeal.

Mr. Osborne on their behalf takes exception to the conduct of the trial in that they have been prejudiced by the simultaneous disposal of a charge triable by a Jury and of charges triable with the aid of Assessors and by the Judge's refusal to allow one of the Assessors to consult the others before giving his opinion as to the charges under sections 396 and 397. The Judge, no doubt, as appears from his judgment, would have preferred to hold two trials; and we may observe with reference to sections 226, 233 and 235, Code of Criminal Procedure, that he was fully competent to do so. But the course, which he followed, of trying all the offences charged together is contemplated by section 269 (3); and we must be satisfied that some further special irregularity, which occasioned a failure of justice, took place in connection with it before we can interfere.

Such an irregularity is alleged to have been committed by the Judge's refusal to allow one Assessor to consult the others before giving his opinion. Mr. Osborne relies on the possibility that the Assessor in question, who would not commit himself regarding the presence of the convicted accused among the dacoits, might have been willing to give his opinion against it as the result of consultation. But the existence of such a possibility will be material only if it is connected with the occurrence of some irregularity in procedure. We cannot find in the Code any provision authorising or forbidding the Judge to allow consultation between the Assessors and although we are not prepared to decide that the Judge may not in his discretion do so, we follow the opinion of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., expressed in Emperor v. Tirumal Reddi (1), to the extent of holding that he is entitled to have before him each Assessor's individual and independent opinion. We, therefore, do not think that there was any irregularity in the trial.

Our attention has then been invited to two instances of misdirection in the charge to the Jury regarding the offence under section 395; and we think that they have been established. Firstly, the Judge relied on the fact that the witnesses, on whose evidence he invited the Jury to act, prosecution 1st, 2nd and 11th witnesses, named the convicted accused for the first time at the inquest on the day following the occurrence, disregarding the absence of anything in the evidence of prosecution 1st and 2nd witnesses to show that they did so and not exhibiting the Inquest Report. Next the defence was that the accused had been implicated owing to the existence of factions, in which they and the prosecution witnesses had taken opposite sides; but the Judge told the Jury that "there was no evidence to support that theory." It is possible that he meant only to negative the existence of direct evidence of any connection between the factions and the implication of the accused. But we doubt whether that construction of what he said would strike the Jury. There was clear evidence of enmity in the depositions of prosecution 1—6 and 9th witnesses; it should have been placed before the Jury and the Jurors should have been asked to consider whether they could draw any inference from it against the prosecution case. As we think that there was misdirection in these two material respects, we must set aside the conviction of the offence under section 395 and direct that the 1st, 2nd, 4th, 9th and 11th accused be re-tried for it.

(1) 24 N. 523; 11 M. L. J. 241; 2 Weir 340.

NILMONEY NAG v. DURGA PADO BANERJEE.

As regards the offences punishable under sections 396 and 397, for which the accused were tried by the Judge with the aid of Assessors, the decision depended on whether the accused were guilty of dacoity.

For no reason has been shown for interference with the Judge's conclusion that the aggravating facts, proof of which is necessary, were established. We understand the Judge to have found against the accused as regards their participation in the dacoity on the grounds indicated in his charge. The corroboration of evidence of the witnesses above specified by their mention of the accused at the inquest was thus of the greatest importance; and when the Inquest Report was not exhibited, we cannot deal with its contents. As we are unable on the evidence before us to concur in the Judge's decision, we set aside these convictions also and direct the re-trial of the accused on the charge of offences punishable under sections 396 and 397, Indian Penal Code.

We think it will be better that the re-trial shall be held by the Sessions Judge. It will, of course, be for him to consider whether he will deal with the charge triable by a Jury and those triable with the aid of Assessors together or not.

Appeal allowed; Re-trial ordered.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 478, 486, scope of—'Trade-mark,' counterfeited—Intention to deceive—'Counterfeit,' meaning of.

The expression "trade-mark," as defined in section 478, Indian Penal Code, must not be confined to the trade-mark of the complainant as registered but must include the whole design. [p. 1008, col. 2.]

Where the express intention is to deceive and the petitioners have failed to bring themselves within the exception to section 486, the case clearly comes within the definition of "counterfeit" in section 28, Indian Penal Code. [p. 1008, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of the 4th Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 26th February 1915:—

The complaint in this case was lodged by Durga Pado Banerjee, a clerk in the Office of Morgan & Co., under instructions from Mr. Mitchel, one of the Solicitors of the firm. Mr. Mitchel derives his authority to prosecute on behalf of Messrs. Calvert & Co. from a Power of Attorney sent to Morgan & Co. for the purpose of this case by Mr. Ross, who holds the head Power of Attorney from Calvert & Co. at Bombay. This Power of Attorney has been marked as Exhibit I in this case. The facts of the case are shortly these. F. C. Calvert & Co. have been selling carbolic tooth powder in tin boxes like Exhibit I since a long time in India and their boxes have a very large sale. Accused Jatindra Mohan has been selling carbolic tooth powder in boxes of similar size and design with the name of Paul & Co. in Calcutta. At Bombay his agent, Mukadam, was prosecuted and convicted for infringement of trade-mark under section 486, Indian Penal Code, in 1913. The matter went up on appeal before the Bombay High Court and the Judges there upheld the conviction (vide Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3) in this case. After that on 14th February 1914, Mr. Mitchel sent for accused Jatindra Mohan and told him about the prosecution of his agent in Bombay and asked the accused to return all the boxes to him. Accused gave a half-hearted undertaking to give up all the boxes in his possession. Thereafter, some correspondence passed between the parties, accused virtually agreeing to dispose of the boxes with the letters obliterated. As a matter of fact the boxes were not delivered. So, Mr. Mitchel sent his clerk, Durga Pado, to purchase Paul & Co.'s tooth powder. In April he purchased six boxes and on 3rd August 1914 three boxes, marked Exhibit II and Exhibit III in this case, from the shop of the 2nd and 3rd accused where these boxes were for sale. The prosecution is confined to the three boxes sold on 3rd August 1914. Amongst these boxes, was one box with the label of Mukadam at the foot. This has been separately marked as Exhibit III. This Mukadam was Paul & Co.'s agent at Bombay and was convicted there. The question now is whether Paul & Co.'s boxes are counterfeit trade-marks of F. C. Calvert & Co.'s. Mr. Mitchel on behalf of Calvert & Co. claims the whole of the shape, size, design, colouring and lettering on the boxes as Calvert & Co.'s trade-mark and I think that he is right in so doing. A comparison between the genuine box of Calvert & Co. with Paul & Co.'s boxes would show that the general get-up, the size, the design, the lettering, the colour of the backgrounds, the lettering on the starting portion of the two boxes closely resemble each other and the resemblance is such that one is likely to be mistaken for the other. In my opinion, it is no defence to say that the name Paul & Co. is different, that in Paul & Co.'s boxes the word "Dantina" occurs and that the cross mark in a circle which exists in Calvert's boxes does not exist in Paul & Co.'s boxes. With slight difference, the resemblance is so great that one is apt to be mistaken for the other and that I think is the gist of the offence. Jatindra Mohan was asked to give up the boxes and though he gave a half-hearted undertaking and was told of the conviction of his agent at Bombay, he did not give up the boxes. It appears that the boxes of Paul & Co. continued to be sold in Calcutta and were sold in April and August in the shop of the 2nd and the 3rd accused. There is no evidence that Jatindra continued to manufacture after he was warned and so I acquit him of the charge, section 483, Indian Penal Code. But taking all the circumstances into consideration, there can be no doubt that he abetted the sale of these boxes. It has been proved that these were sold at the shop of the 2nd and 3rd accused. The 2nd accused was not present at any of the sales and so I acquit him, section 258, Civil Procedure Code. As regards Nilmoney, he sold the boxes and it is for him to show that he did so innocently. He has not disclosed that onus and I find him guilty, section 486, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 100 (one hundred) or in default two months' simple imprisonment. I find accused Jatindra Mohan Paul guilty, section 486/109 Indian Penal Code, and as he is the principal man, I sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 150 or in default three months' simple imprisonment.

On the side of the defence, several other boxes of other manufacturers were produced as sold in the market. But there is nothing to show that Calvert & Co. or their agents ever acquiesced in that, nor it appears to me a good defence to say that others have infringed complainants' trade-marke.

JUDGMENT.—These are two Rules issued at the instance of the two accused, Jatindra Mohan Pal and Nilmoney Nag, on the ground that the facts found do not constitute an offence under section 486, Indian Penal Code. Nilmoney Nag was charged with selling goods bearing a counterfeit trade-mark and Jatindra Mohan Pal was charged with abetment of the offence. The matter has been fully argued before us, and we are of opinion that the petitioner's acts bring them within the purview of section 486. The trade-mark said to be counterfeited is that of F. C. Calvert and Co., manufacturers of carbolic tooth powder. The expression "trade-mark" as defined in section 478 must not be confined to the trade-mark of the complainants registered in England, but must include the whole design on the top of the box and the black label pasted round the side. For the name F. C. Calvert has been substituted the name of Paul, and for the registered trade-mark, which consists of four arrows in a circle, has been substituted the word "Dantina". But apart from these two points of difference the imitation of the whole design is most marked and complete. It clearly comes within the definition of "counterfeit" in section 28. There is no doubt that the intention was to deceive and the petitioners have failed to bring themselves within the exceptions in section 486. The same view seems to have been taken by the Bombay High Court. The Rules are discharged.

Rules discharged.

 Rent-free title—Adverseness to that extent.

Where the plaintiff in a suit for assessment of rent clearly proceeded upon the assumption that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant, and the same view was also advanced in the written statement, and the evidence also showed that even at the trial the case was that the defendants were in possession not as tenants but wrongfully and without any right, and it was found that the defendants had been in possession for more than 12 years on their own account, though they claimed no more than a rent-free title:

Held, that the possession in the circumstances would be adverse to that extent and would furnish an answer to the suit. C. BIRENDRA KISORE MANIKYA v. RAM CHANDRA DEY, 22 C. L. J. 153 948

— Long possession—Non-payment of rent.

Where the defendant has been in possession on his own behalf far beyond the statutory period and during all this time there has been no payment of rent by him and no receipt of rent by the plaintiff in respect of the land in suit, there are the elements that are required for a plea in bar by reason of adverse possession. C. — Sale of property of absconder under ss. 87 and 88 of Criminal Procedure Code—Vendee, rights of—Suit by collaterals of absconder—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144.

A sale under sections 87 and 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, of the property of an absconding accused transfers only his personal rights and does not confer absolute ownership on the vendees.

Where, therefore, H, a village proprietor, murdered his wife in 1891 and absconded and his property was sold to the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants Nos. 2 to 7 and H was afterwards arrested, tried, convicted and hanged on 22nd September 1893:

Held, on a suit by his collaterals instituted on 22nd August 1903 for possession on the ground that the sale did not affect their reversionary rights, that the defendants' possession did not become adverse to the plaintiffs till after the death of H and the suit was, therefore, quite within time. P. Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (5), 167—Defendant sued as trespasser—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Alternative relief for declaration as tenant.

The plaintiff sued the defendants in the Civil Court for ejectment upon the allegation that whatever the defendants might once have been they were now in wrongful possession of the land as trespassers. The plaintiff further claimed as an alternative relief that if it be found that the defendants were holding as tenants, a declaration might be given to that effect:

Held, that the suit was maintainable in Civil Court and that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to give a declaration as to the existence or non-existence of tenancy but not as to the class of tenancy. A. ALI JAFAR v. PHULMANTA KOER, 13 A. L. J. 843 546

_____ s. 51— Suspension of rent—Right of zemindar to recover rent Land-holder collecting suspended rent by distraint, if commits offence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188.
An order suspending or remitting arrears of rent is not an order prohibiting the land-holder from receiving the same if tendered, or attempting to realize the same by lawful means.
Therefore a land-holder endeavouring to collect suspended arrears by process of distraint is not guilty of an offence under section 183 of the Penal Code.
Its effect is simply to deprive him of his right of suit in respect of the arrears remitted or of the suspended arrears during the period of suspension.

Appeal (Civil)—concld.

- Partition suit—Preliminary decree, nature of, appeal against, if competent, when—Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908, s. 97, scope of.
Under section 97 of the Code of Civil Procedure not only has an appellant a right to appeal against a preliminary decree, but he is bound to appeal or else he is precluded from questioning it in a subsequent proceeding.
Where no appeal is preferred against the final decree, the appeal against the preliminary decree is not incompetent.
The law gives a right to appeal against the preliminary decree and that right is not taken away because no appeal is preferred against the final decree, which is subject to the decision in the appeal in the preliminary decree. Evidence, weight or value of 279

Fact, finding of, arrived at only in first appeal, binding effect of—Sufficiency of evidence—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, as proof of custom recorded therein—Custom, proof of—Jus tertii—Third party entitled disclaiming interest, effect of—Title to property—Conveyance of property not effected by statements unless evidenced by some Act within law.

Where a Court of first instance comes to no definite finding on an issue of fact and the first Appellate Court does come to such a finding on that issue after an examination of the evidence, the second Appellate Court is concluded by the finding of the first Appellate Court.

The question whether a particular wajib-ul-arz is sufficient proof of a custom recorded in it is a question not of law but of fact, as it is a question regarding the weight or value to be attached to it. And it cannot be contended as a matter of law that a wajib-ul-arz, if un rebutted, is conclusive proof of custom.

Where the plaintiffs claimed to recover a property from the defendant on the ground that they had a better title to it than he had and the defendant pleaded that there was a third party in existence who was best entitled to the property, but the plaintiffs produced that party as a witness and he disclaimed all title to it:

Held, that the plaintiffs could not succeed simply because of the third party's statement, inasmuch as such statement alone could not, in the absence of some act within the law having the effect of transferring the property to the plaintiffs, operate as a conveyance of the property to the plaintiffs. O. TILAK RAM v. SITARAM, 2 O. L. J. 388 503

Finding of fact, when to be questioned in second appeal—Evidence, finding of fact not supported by, can be questioned in second appeal.

It is the duty of an Appellate Court to refer to the evidence produced in a case and to adduce from it reasons in support of its conclusions as required by Order XLI, rule 31, Civil Procedure Code; all the more so, when it reverses a decision of a lower Court embodied in a somewhat lengthy judgment.

A lessor cannot justify a re-entry by force under cover of a clause in the lease reserving to him a right of re-entry with or without resort to the Courts in case of breach of all or any of the conditions mentioned in the lease, inasmuch as a condition justifying an entry by force is void as being against law or public policy.

In cases where forcible re-entry by the lessor is set up by the lessee, the fact that a report complaining of the use of force or intimidation was made to the Police soon after the occurrence is a relevant fact under section 11 of the Evidence Act and admissible in evidence.

The Judge of a Subordinate Court, however brilliant and well-trained a lawyer he may be, is not entitled to refuse to follow the decision of the High Court to which his Court is subordinate; still less is he entitled to sit in judgment upon the decision of such a High Court and declare it to be erroneous. O. Unrecorded proprietor not heard in partition proceedings—Declaratory suit, whether barred—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 66, 74—Document in possession of defendant—Production of document not sought—Genuineness of document not questioned—Discretion of Court—Certified copy of Letters of Administration, admissibility in evidence of—Public document.

An estate wherein the plaintiff claimed a share was the subject of partition by the Revenue Authorities. The plaintiff was not a recorded proprietor, and, consequently, his application to intervene in the partition proceedings was rejected and he was denied an opportunity to be heard. Before the completion of those proceedings the plaintiff instituted a suit seeking a declaration that the share which had been allotted to his predecessor-in-interest was his property:

Held, that the suit was not barred under the provisions of clause (f) of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and that it was open to the Civil Court, at that stage, to make a declaration of title in favour of the plaintiff.

A certified copy of an order of a Probate Court to the effect that Letters of Administration be granted to the person named with a copy of the Will annexed is a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act and is consequently admissible in evidence. It would also be admissible Benami transaction—English Law, resemblance with—Relationship—Criterion—Practice—Document, effect of non-production of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Estoppel between landlord and tenant.

A benami transaction is a dealing common to Hindus and Musalmans in India. It is quite unobjectionable and has a curious resemblance to the doctrine of English Law that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase-money, and this again follows the analogy of Common Law that where a feoffment is made without consideration the use results to the feoffor. The exception in English Law by way of advancement in favour of wife or child does not apply in India, but the relationship is a circumstance which is taken into consideration in India in determining whether the transaction is benami or not. The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid.

A taluqdar, who had two Hindu wives and a Musalman mistress, purchased a bungalow, the sale-deed being made out and registered in the name of his mistress. The purchase-money he raised by a mortgage on his own property and he had the sole use and enjoyment of the bungalow for himself and his wives during his own life. The wives used it by his permission for a religious purpose for a month at a time, while the mistress was never in it during this period. In fact the bungalow was quite useless to her for any personal use, and it was wholly inappropriate as a provision for her. The sale-deed, however, was in her possession:

Held, that the purchase was a benami transaction and that the mistress had no title to the bungalow.

It is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any documents that he considers irrelevant; if the other litigant is dissatisfied it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails to do so neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents.

It is for the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way; if he fails to do so no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof.

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be as long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. *P. C. The plaintiff sued the defendants for ejectment as mere trespassers. The suit was dismissed as barred by time. In appeal it was contended that a previous decree in what was called a resumption suit established the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and hence the suit was within time:

Held, that the decree could not be accepted as establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant, inasmuch as the resumption suit was one instituted under Regulation II of 1819, and subsequently transferred to the Civil Court under Bengal Act VII of 1862, and it was at least as reasonable to regard it as a suit dealing with revenue as a suit dealing with rent and, moreover, it was the predecessor of the defendant that was a party to that suit. *C. Entry in Record of Rights before amendment of 1898 disputed—Presumption—Repudiation by both parties—Burden of proof—Possession—Long possession without payment of rent and with assertion of title, effect of.

No presumption of correctness can apply to an entry made, after the decision of a dispute, in a Record of Rights before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act by Act III of 1898.

It is open, however, to the parties to agree that the entry is not correct, and must be repudiated, though they are not at one as to what should be substituted in its place.

Hence, where the plaintiff repudiates the entry as fraudulently obtained, and the defendants repudiate it as erroneously made, the Court should not place upon the defendant the burden of rebutting the entry upon which the plaintiff does not place reliance.

When the plaintiff comes into Court on the allegation that the defendants have never attorned to him, there is no room for the suggestion that the possession of the defendants was possession on his behalf.

Long possession of the disputed lands by the defendants and their predecessors without payment of rent and under assertion of a rent-free title justifies the inference that the defendants had the title they set up. C. SOBHAN BAKSH v. BIRENDRA KISORE, 22 C. L. J. 144

Held, that the lease was merely voidable at the instance of the defendant but that no question could now arise as to the avoidance of the lease as the plaintiff had been allowed to hold over ever since 1910.

Where the plaintiff was allowed to hold over after the expiry of the original term of the lease and occupies the agricultural land for a period of nine years in a district to which sections 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were, before the grant of the lease, extended:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff acquired the status of a non-occupancy raiyat, and that this status could not be retrospectively affected by the subsequent extension to the district of section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act;

(2) that the plaintiff was a non-occupancy raiyat under the defendant and was entitled to have fair rent assessed under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C. SITANATH PANDA v. HARA NARAIN MAHA-PATRA, 22 C. L. J. 644

Where rent is assessed for excess land in possession of a tenant as also for new land taken by him, and one consolidated rent is assessed for all the lands in his possession, there is in essence a new holding created and no question arises as to the enhancement of rent payable by the tenant and section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to such a case.

Where, therefore, five bighas of new lands were added to the original seven bighas and, a consolidated rent was settled by a contract, a new holding was created by the contract and the new rental was not an enhancement of the original rental. C. The kabuliyat recited that the tenants held an ancestral jama of ten bighas at an annual rent of Rs. 6-15 under the plaintiff, his co-sharers and a lady named Jadumonee Dasi. The tenants agreed by the kabuliyat that from the date thereof they would hold the land in the share of the plaintiff and his co-sharers at the rate of Rs. 14-6. The co-sharers were joined as defendants, and they did not object to the plaintiff's claim of his share only. Jadumonee was not made a party.

Held, that the agreement to pay enhanced rent was in contravention of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and consequently unenforceable; that the kabuliyat might, however, be used as evidence of an agreement that the defendants would from the date thereof pay rent to the plaintiff and his co-sharers separately from Jadumonee; and

In a suit for declaration of title to land and assessment of rent, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, but gave the plaintiff a declaration that he had zemindari right in the disputed land:

Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

Held, that the Court by the declaration merely intended to hold that the land was situated within the ambit of the plaintiff's estate, and not that the defendants or their predecessors held, at any time, as tenants under the plaintiff.

Under sub-section 3 of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stands under Act I of 1907 the evidence by which the entry may be proved to be incorrect, may be evidence of facts of a date prior to that of the publication of the Record of Rights, although evidence of facts subsequent to the publication may also throw an important light upon the solution of the problem.

Where the defendants were treated by the plaintiff as trespassers in 1894 and notwithstanding the entry in the Record of Rights in 1898 to the effect that the defendants were settled *raiya*s, the defendants had since that date repudiated the theory of a possible tenancy:

Held, that the entry in the Record of Rights had been amply rebutted, in the absence of any suggestion and any evidence in support of a possible allegation that between 1894 and 1898 a tenancy was created by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant.

Where, according to the defendants, they and their ancestors have been in occupation of the disputed land from generation to generation without payment of rents, and the plaintiff has failed to prove that he or his predecessor has ever been in possession of the land by actual occupation or receipt of rent:

Held, that under the circumstances, the claim for assessment of rent, which is really a claim for possession of the land, is barred by limitation. C. BIRENDRA KISORE MANIKYA v. KAILAS CHANDRA SARKAR, 22 C. L. J. 140

Section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that a landlord or a tenant may make an application within a certain time for settlement of rent and upon such application the Settlement Officer is to settle a fair and equitable rent of the lands held by the tenants.

Where the tenant of a co-sharer landlord has executed a kabuliat in favour of that landlord in respect of his share of the lands in his holding and enters into a separate agreement with him for the purpose of a tenancy, such co-sharer landlord is not to be considered as joint landlord with his co-sharer in respect of the tenancy under the kabuliat but as a separate landlord.

A share of an undivided holding cannot be called a holding.

The order of a Settlement Officer in the Survey and Record of Rights under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 as originally passed, is a decree within the terms of section 9 of Act III (B. C.) of 1898 and will operate as res judicata in respect of points considered and decided.

Section 9 of the amending Act III of 1898 clearly shows that the amendment of section 106 does not apply to the order of a Settlement Officer in the Survey and Record of Rights.

The intention of the Legislature, as can be gathered from sections 163, 164 and 165 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is to entitle a decree-holder, if he so desires, to proceed under section 165 in the event of the sale on the first notification not realising a sum sufficient to liquidate the amount of the decree and costs.

It is not obligatory upon him, however, in this contingency, to avail himself of the provisions of section 165; he may nevertheless be content with the sale under section 164 and if the sale is held under that section, the result described therein follows, viz., the purchaser becomes entitled to annul all encumbrances other than registered and notified encumbrances, provided he follows the procedure prescribed in section 167.

The consequence of the sale does not depend upon the amount of the bid offered by the successful purchaser, it is independent of the value of the bid.

Section 165 was enacted solely for the benefit of the decree-holder; if the bid is not sufficient to satisfy his decree and costs, it entitles him to have the property sold, with power to annul all encumbrances, but it is not obligatory on him to adopt this extreme measure and he is not in peril if he decides not to pursue this special remedy. C. Bombay City Land Revenue Act (II of 1876)—Object of the Act—Register, maps and records under Act—Statements in register and records, value of—Estoppel—Omissions, errors or mistakes of Collector, whether can affect Government's interests.

The Bombay City Land Revenue Act must be treated as defining the extent of the rights of any one who consults the Rent Rolls, i. e., maps, registers, and records kept at the office of the Collector of Bombay, and in order to ascertain these rights the Act must be read as a whole and its purpose ascertained. The Act sets up machinery only for the administration and collection of the land revenue of the Government in the city of Bombay. The object is to ascertain who is liable to pay. The Collector is a Revenue Official, and it is only in so far as the collection of revenue is concerned that he is entrusted with the duty of preparing a register and keeping records. The public are given access to these only in order to satisfy themselves that they are being properly assessed. The Act does not purport to establish a system of registration of title, which is to supersede other means of conveying or registering the title to land or to relieve purchasers or mortgagees from the ordinary obligation to see that they get what they have contracted to get. No doubt the register is of considerable use even for conveyancing purposes. But neither the language of the Statute nor the character of the Officials, who have the duty of keeping it, is such as to indicate an invitation to the public to rely on statements in the records as to title which may have to be made incidentally, but which are not expressed and do not purport to be decisive either of the rights of the Government or of those of the individual as to matters which go beyond liability to contribute to land revenue.

Where, therefore, a person, relying on certain wrong statements in certified extracts from the Rent Rolls of Quit and Ground Rent Land, kept in the office of the Collector of Bombay, and on certain notices and bills issued by the Collector, took a piece of land situate in the city of Bombay as the land of quit and ground rent and not of sanadi tenure which was resumable by the Government on giving six months' notice and providing compensation for buildings and other improvements, and advanced a big sum of money on mortgage of the land:

(2) that mesne profits, that is, the net receipts from the property, cannot be decreed against the mortgagee from the date of the suit.

The presumption is that unless there is some definite indication on the part of the person in possession that he will, from a certain date, claim as absolute owner and not as mortgagee, he can only acquire by adverse possession the limited interest to which he was entitled at the mortgagor's death, namely that of a mortgagee.

The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act makes no provision with reference to profits after the date of the institution of a redemption suit, and no presumption arises that the mortgagee is, apart from the provisions of the Act, not entitled to retain possession after the date of the institution of the suit. B. Questions as to the validity of shinbyu gifts are questions regarding a religious usage and have, therefore, to be decided according to Buddhist Law under section 13 of the Burma Laws Act of 1898.

Buddhist Law—conold.

A gift of property made publicly by both parents or by the surviving parent, if one is dead at the time of the shinbyu ceremony constitutes as between the donee and his co-heirs a valid gift although possession of the property was not given but such property remains absolutely at the disposal of the parents or the survivor of them for their life-time or his or her life-time.

Where in such a case the donee dies leaving either of the donors surviving, the gift has no effect and the donee's heirs cannot take benefit of the exception regarding possession obtaining in shinbyu gifts. L B. MA PAN NYUN v MA HLA SEIN, 8 BUR. L. T. 149 665 ss 3, 14. applicability of—Collector's sanction—Sale after mortgage—Pre-emption—Right of subsequent purchaser—Redemption

Certain property situate in Bundelkhand was sold. The defendant brought a pre-emption suit and obtained a decree, but the sale was not sanctioned by the Collector as required by Act II of 1903 and the name of the pre-emptor was recorded as a usufructuary mortgagee for 20 years under section 14 of the Act. The mortgagors then sold the property to the plaintiff who sued to redeem it from the defendant who was in possession as a mortgagee:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property.

Section 3 of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act applies to all "permanent alienations" even though the alienation is brought about by the exercise of a right of pre-emption.

The policy of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act is to prevent persons, who are not members of an agricultural tribe, acquiring property. A. RAM NATH v. HARAIN, 13 A. L. J. 662; 37 A. 467 404

There being no express provision in the Calcutta Municipal Act requiring that notices issued under the Act on behalf of the General Committee should be signed at all, section 589 of the Act does not stand in the way of the Secretary to the Corporation, who is also the Secretary to the General Committee, signing such notices. But unless a notice purports to have been signed by the Chairman of the Corporation, the special rule of evidence contained in the section would not apply. A suit under section 83 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act is governed by Article 120, and not by Article 14, of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908.

Where a dispute related to an entry made by a Settlement Officer in a Record of Rights prepared under Chapter VI of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act and the appellants were described as shikmi gaontias or permanent tenants under the plaintiffs, who were the gaontias of the village, and a suit was instituted by the plaintiffs under section 83 of the Land Revenue Act to have the entry amended so that the appellants might be described as mortgagees and not as permanent tenants:

Held, that the Settlement Officer acted either under section 68 or section 72 of the Act in deciding the question between the parties or in making the disputed entry in the Record of Rights, and that under section 83, the Civil Court had jurisdiction to review his decision or the entry.

The provision of section 120 shows that a suit under section 83 is in the nature of a declaratory suit and that in spite of the express provisions of the section, a Civil Court can only declare that an entry is erroneous and how it should be amended, but it cannot execute its decree by bringing the Record of Rights into Court and altering it. The decree has to be taken to the Deputy Commissioner. This conclusion is confirmed by section 152, clause (b), which deprives the Civil Court of jurisdiction over certain matters including correction of entries or revision of records under sections 120, 121 and 122. C. It is not competent to a single Judge of the High Court, exercising the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the Court, to stay the hearing of a suit pending for trial in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil unless authorised so to do by rule.

Per Macleod, J.—A single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court is not competent to make an order for a stay of proceedings at the instance of a party to a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court nor is he competent at the instance of a party in a suit pending before him to issue a prohibition to a Subordinate Judge against proceeding with a suit between the same parties; but he is competent, under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil, and so in effect stay proceedings.

Obiter.—There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for the consolidation of suits, but a Court has inherent jurisdiction under section 151 to consolidate two or more suits pending before it. The High Court, however, has no jurisdiction to entertain an original application for the consolidation of suits pending before a District Court, and the case is still stronger when the suits are pending in different Courts. B. Two joint mortgagees of a property sued on their mortgage and obtained a mortgage-decree. Only one of them applied for execution of the decree expressly praying that it may be executed subject to the rights of the other mortgagee. The mortgaged property was accordingly put up to sale and purchased by the executing mortgagee:

Held, (1) that the purchase by the executing mortgagee was not exclusively for himself but for the benefit of both mortgagees, and that, therefore, the other mortgagee was entitled to recover his share of the property;

(2) that the provisions of section 317, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, had no application to the case, inasmuch as they were designed to create some check on the practice of making what were called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affected the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase.

The case was tried on the merits and on the 8th May 1912, a decree was made, with the usual direction that the judgment-debt be realised out of the estate of the deceased in the hands of the substituted defendants. On the 9th June 1913, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and notices were duly issued. Thereupon the wives of the three sons of the deceased intervened and stated that execution could not proceed as M had made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 18th May 1911, whereby they had been appointed executrices:

In the face of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, which permits suits to be treated as proceedings, the dismissal of a suit on the ground that the plaintiff must have applied for executing a decree and not have sued to enforce specific performance of a contract is bad in law. The mere fact that the Court which decided the suit would have had no jurisdiction to determine the matter in execution is not a sound reason for not treating the suit as an application in execution.

A, a decree-holder against C, the judgment-debtor, sought to satisfy his dues by the sale of an occupancy holding of C. C objected that the holding was not transferable and could not be sold in execution of a decree for money. The objection was overruled and the execution was allowed. B another decree-holder against C applied for execution of his decree by sale of the same holding, and in the alternative prayed for rateable distribution if the holding was sold in execution of A's decree. C again objected that the holding was not transferable and this time his objection was allowed. The holding, however, was sold in A's decree.

Held, that B was entitled to rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds.

No valid claim for rateable distribution can be laid under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure if, in an application for execution of the decree, it has been held that the decree has been satisfied, or is barred by limitation, or if such application has been dismissed.

If pursuant to an erroneous order of a Subordinate Court money has been paid out to a litigant, it is competent to the High Court to direct that person to bring back the money into Court when such erroneous order is set aside. The Court has inherent power to direct such restitution to enable it to do effective and complete justice between the parties.

To bring a case under section 73, it is necessary to establish that more persons than one have made an application to the Court for execution of decrees for payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, before the receipt of the assets in respect whereof rateable distribution is claimed. C. An order for rateable distribution cannot be made, under sub-section (1) of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in favour of a person who has not obtained his decree but only an order for attachment before judgment and who is thus incompetent to apply for execution at the time when the assets are realised.

It is only where an application for execution has been made before the realization of assets that section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies.

The doctrine of inherent powers of a Court, recognised by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, has no application where there is an express provision of law which covers a case.

Attachment before judgment does not, by itself, create any interest in the property attached.

Held, that the suit as framed was not against the diety of the temple, as represented by the Ruling Chief, but was against the Ruling Chief himself and that, therefore, it was not maintainable without the consent of the Governor-General in Council, under section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The privilege of not being liable to be sued without the consent of the Governor-General in Council is not waived if, after pleading it, the defendant pleads also on the merits of the case.

Civil Procedure Code—(1908)—contd.

The mere fact that the founder of a temple intended for public worship is spending a portion of his income derived from a certain property to the upkeep of the temple is insufficient to establish that the corpus of the property is dedicated to the use of the temple.

An entry made in a Revenue Register without any explanation as to how it originated or was brought into existence is, if inconsistent with other known facts, not entitled to any weight.

It is not open to a partition-officer of the Revenue Courts to convert private property into wagf property by giving it a particular designation, and his proceedings in regard to the distribution of and title to the land, are not conclusive as between a party to the partition and strangers. O. Section 96 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to an order directing the appointment of a Commissioner with the consent of parties.

Section 43 (5) of Madras Act I of 1902 does not provide for any payment but a reference to sections 32 and 55 of the Act shows that the calculation mentioned in that section will determine the net income which the Court of Wards having management will be in a position to set apart for payment.

There is no authority or principle which binds a Court to construe a decree in the mode in which the parties intended it to operate however incompatible such a construction may be with the plain language of the decree. The duty of the Court is to execute the decree as it finds it and not as understood by the parties. If a particular construction has been placed by the Court upon a decree, and if it has been enforced by the process of the Court, the parties may be estopped, with certain limitations, from claiming that the decree should be construed differently.

Rule 2 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, should be so construed as not to defeat justice.

Where a decree-holder certifies a payment or adjustment to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2, the Court is bound to inquire into the truth or correctness of the statement made and to ascertain the exact amount for which credit should be given to the judgment-debtor. The Court is not confined to merely entering the figures supplied by the decree-holder.

No particular words are necessary for the purpose of certifying a payment or adjustment to the Court under Order XXI, rule 2. A mere intimation in an execution application that a certain amount had been received from the judgment-debtor but that it had been appropriated towards another liability amounts to certifying within the meaning of the rule.

The doctrine that there can be no estoppel against a plain provision of the law should not be pushed too far. The principle is that parties should not be permitted by an arrangement between themselves to commit an illegality. The right should not be extended to cases which have the effect of enabling parties to make a law for themselves in violation of the law of the land. But where such a result will not follow, there is nothing to prevent the application of the provisions of section 115 of the Evidence Act to agreements between the parties.

There is nothing opposed to public policy or illegal in parties stipulating that a certain sum of money which is recoverable as between themselves in a regular suit should be adjusted in execution proceedings. Therefore, where a decree-holder certifies and informs the Court of an adjustment, he is not entitled to say that payments received by him are accountable by him only in a regular suit. M. The petitioner's appeal was rejected by the District Judge as forbidden by section 104, clause (h), Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that although an order directing the arrest of a person in execution was excepted from appeal by clause (h) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, sections 42, 47 and 145 of the Code gave the petitioner a right of appeal. C. Where, as regards the subject-matter of a proposed appeal to Privy Council, a High Court has affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance (though it has made some modifications in the decree as regards another portion of the claim), it is essential for the grant of a certificate of leave to appeal to the Privy Council (even if the value of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal is above ten thousand rupees) that the appeal must involve some substantial question of law.

Misconstruction of a portion of the evidence relating to particular facts cannot be treated as a "substantial question of law" within the meaning of section 10, Civil Procedure Code. M. MULRAJU LAKSHMI VENKAYAMMA RAO v. VENKATADRI APPA RAO 372

The power of superintendence and the powers given by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code are intended to give the High Court power to see that the proceedings before lower Courts are properly conducted and the High Court should not refuse to set right matters if by doing so, it would save unnecessary expense or delay or a multiplicity of proceedings.

Where, therefore, in a suit brought to enforce the terms of an agreement entered into by the defendants with the plaintiff's husband, the plaint proceeded upon the footing that it was a valid, subsisting and enforceable contract, and at the close of the arguments the plaintiff's Vakil in reply suggested that even if the contract was void, section 65 of the Contract Act applied, and the Court thinking that the contention was raised in the pleadings directed the defendants to file an additional written statement:

Held, (1) that the Court had no jurisdiction to direct the defendants to file an additional written statement to meet allegations not contained in the plaint and which could, by no stretch of imagination, be held to be covered by the allegations in the plaint;

(2) that the proper course for the Court to adopt was to direct the plaintiff to amend the plaint, then to decide whether the amendments should be allowed, and if allowed to direct the defendants to file written statements, settle proper issues and then proceed to decide the case. M. Under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure a High Court can revise a decision of the Presidency Court of Small Causes.

But its powers under section 115 (a) and (b) are not co-extensive with its powers in appeal, it cannot, therefore, go into facts nor can it interfere on the ground of mere mistake in fact or law.

Oldfield, J.—A wrong decision of a question with which a Court is competent to deal cannot affect its jurisdiction to pass a decree based on that decision though a Court cannot confer jurisdiction on itself by the wrong determination of a question.

Order XXI, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, contemplates that a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other should be regarded as a single indivisible order of the Court enforceable only for the balance, that is, the difference between the two sums awarded, and that balance becomes awardable by the Court without the intervention of the parties as soon as the amount of the balance is determined.

Therefore, though the party entitled to the larger sum would be barred by limitation from recovering the larger sum awarded to him under the decree, that does not entitle the party claiming the smaller sum to take out execution. B. It was contended for the judgment-debtor that the Ambala Court had no jurisdiction to issue the prohibitory orders:

Held, that the contention was valid, for there was nothing to show that the judgment-debtor could have claimed payment at Ambala and that the mere fact that the judgment-debtor resided at Ambala and the work done by him was done partly in the Ambala District and his claims had first to be passed by the Examiner of Accounts at Lahore did not confer jurisdiction on the Ambala Court. P. A plaintiff who is calling in question in a suit contemplated by Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code an adverse decision of a Court, has to show affirmatively that not only the ostensible but the real title also is in him. He cannot discharge the burden of proof cast on him by merely pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which he claims, he must show that they are as good as they look.

Such a suit is to alter or set aside a summary decision or order of the Court, and it is a method of obtaining review. C. JAMAHAR KUMARI BIBI V. ASKARAN BOID, 22 C. L. J. 27 855

An officer conducting a Court-sale has no authority to extend the time in which the purchaser can under Order XXI, rule 84, Civil Procedure Code, deposit 25 per cent. of the purchase-money, which has to be deposited immediately.

A failure to deposit anything out of 25 per cent. of the purchase-money under Order XXI, rule 84 Civil Procedure Code, vitiates the sale ab initio.

An order confirming a Court sale in favour of a transferee from the bidder, who himself alleges not to be the actual purchaser, is erroneous, as the transferee is not the auction-purchaser. And a Court making such order has every right to set it aside under the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, when the error comes to its notice, and no question of limitation arises in such a case.

An order made by a Division Bench of the High Court setting aside the abatement of a second appeal under Order XXII, rule 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code, cannot be questioned by a different Bench, even though the order may be ex parte as the order does not require the issue of a notice. The only proper way of setting it aside is by way of review.

If persons purporting to act as trustees on behalf of a community and allowed so to act by it, give possession of a land belonging to the community to a third person, the possession of the latter is at its inception only permissive and not adverse to the community.

The cause of action for a declaratory suit, based on denial of title, does not arise until the plaintiff has knowledge of the denial.

An application for an order absolute for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, is governed by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, and the period of limitation should be computed from the time when the right to apply first accrued.

A preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, was made on the 27th of February 1909. The decree allowed a period of six months to the judgment-debtor to pay the amount of the decree and that period expired on the 20th of

Held, that the application, having been made beyond three years from the date of the expiration of the period for payment, was barred by time under Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, 1908.

Held, further, that the subsequent decrees by the Appellate Courts only affirmed the right given by the Court of first instance and did not give rise to a fresh right unless the decree of the Court of first instance was in any respect varied by the Appellate Courts. A. The word "property" in Order XL, rule 4, and in the other clauses of the section is synonymous with estate and covers income from the property.

Order XL, rule 4, is a residuary provision intended to deal with all cases of loss to the estate not specially provided for and, therefore, applies to a case of misappropriation also. M. MULLAPALI TARAVATHIL v. GOPALA MENON, 18 M. L. T. 127 383

To justify the application of rule 4 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure it is essential that the appeal should have been preferred against the whole decree.

For the application of rule 33 of Order XLI of the Code, it is not essential that the appeal should be directed against the entire decree, nor need the order be made in favour of persons who are XIV, ss. 16, 167—Stranger purchasing holding in execution of decree for arrears of rent—Annulment of sub-lease.

As a general rule, no order of review can be made without previous notice to the person in possession of the decree which is to be reviewed.

But an application for review of an order of dismissal under rule 11, Order XLI, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, can be granted without the issue of any notice to the respondent.

The expression "opposite party" in the proviso to rule 4 of Order XLVII may be taken to mean the party interested to support the order sought to be vacated or modified upon the application for review.

The propriety of an order granting a review of the order of dismissal of an appeal under rule 11 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, can be considered only by the Bench granting the review, and it is that Bench alone which can either maintain or vacate the original order of dismissal.

Whether the entire case is or is not re-opened when a review has been granted, must depend upon the circumstances of each individual case.

When an appeal is admitted under rule 12, Order XLI, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the appeal cannot be restricted to one or more grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal, the whole appeal is before the Court when the case is taken up for final disposal.

The principle that, when a person has granted a lease on the allegation that he had such interest as entitled him to create a valid lease in favour of the grantee, the doctrine of estoppel operates between the grantor and the grantee, does not apply to the case of a purchaser of a holding at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent suing to eject the defendant as a trespasser.

Civil Procedure Code—(1908)—contd.

The rights of a stranger who has purchased at a sale held in execution of a decree under Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act are regulated by the provisions of that Chapter, which authorise the purchaser to annul all encumbrances—including sub-tenancies—mentioned in section 161 of the Act. He can take the requisite steps under section 167 to annul a sub-tenancy. C. JANAKI-NATH HORE V. PRABHASINI DAS, 22 C. L. J. 99; 19 O. W. N. 1077 898

Held, that the Court apparently acted under Order XLI, rule 17; that under the circumstances the appeal should be re-admitted; and that the mere presence of the appellant in the Court-room on the day of hearing and his having asked the Court for time to get his Pleader did not constitute appearance of the appellant within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. C. NANDA KUMAR BARUA V. NABIN CHANDRA, 22 C. L. J. 72 878

Therefore, a memorandum of objections presented on the 16th March, the plaintiff having been served with notice on the 13th February, was presented out of time, although the 15th March was Sunday. M. CHENNAMA SHETTITHI V. KRISHNAYYA SETTI, 29 M. L. J. 182 832

The test laid down in clause (b) rule 27 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code to enable an Appellate Court to admit additional evidence is not, whether any tribunal would be unable to pronounce any judgment without the production of the additional evidence in question; but, whether the mind of the Appellate Judge is in such a condition on the evidence on record that he requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable him to pronounce judgment.

Where an Appellate Court states explicitly that the additional evidence was required in order to enable the Court to pronounce its opinion on the merits of the contest between the parties:

Civil Procedure Code—(1908)—contd.

Held, that the evidence was admissible under rule 27 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, inasmuch as a wide discretion is given to the trying Judge, when he feels a difficulty himself or when he considers it proper in the interests of justice, to admit evidence which as a matter of discipline between party and party might be rejected.

Where in an action against a common carrier for non-delivery of a plank consigned to him for carriage, the prayer in the plaint asked for plank and damages for its detention or in the alternative its value together with interest thereon and there was no allegation in the plaint that the defendant was in possession of the plank in question:

Held, that the suit could not be treated as one for the return of specific moveable property lost, under section 11 of the Specific Relief Act, but only as one for compensation for non-delivery of goods.

Article 31 of the Limitation Act, 1908, applies to a claim by a consignor against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods consigned.

In order to entitle a person to obtain delivery of specific moveable property by suit and to enforce the decrees obtained by the stringent methods provided in Order XXI, rule 31, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that he should allege and prove facts which entitle him to compel the delivery of the specific moveable under the provisions of section 11 of the Specific Relief Act.

In order to determine whether or not the promisor intended to impose upon himself a legal liability, the following points have to be considered, viz., the nature of the services rendered, whether at the time the promise was made there was any outstanding liability on the part of the promisor to remunerate the promisee, whether the services were of a nature for which no compensation was expected and whether they had already been fully compensated for. If there was an outstanding liability, the subsequent promise will be almost conclusive evidence of the value which the parties intended to put upon the liability.

A mere direction in a document to which the plaintiff is not a party, to pay a certain sum to the plaintiff, is not enough to create a trust in his favour.

Where A contracts with B to pay a sum of money to C, the latter cannot sue A merely on the basis of such a contract. In order to enable C to sue, the contract must be intended to secure a benefit to him so that he may be entitled to say that he has a beneficial interest as cestui que trust. It is not possible to lay down categorically and exhaustively the circumstances which have to be considered in order to determine whether or not a contract is intended to secure such a benefit.

In consideration of great services rendered to him by the plaintiff and his father, the husband of the defendant (a zemindar) had agreed to pay the plaintiff a salary of Rs. 20 a month during the life-time of the plaintiff. This agreement was adverted to in a deed whereunder the zemindar usufructually mortgaged his estate in favour of his wife, the latter being asked to pay the salary to the plaintiff. This arrangement was acted upon by the defendant till some time after her husband's death, when she refused to continue the payment. The plaintiff thereupon sued for the recovery of the salary.

Held, that there was an enforceable contract between the plaintiff and the defendant's husband, and that the clause in the mortgage-deed constituted a trust in favour of the plaintiff. M. INUGANTI KASTURAMMA v. CHALIKANI VENKATASURATYA, 2 L. W. 920; 18 M. L. T. 353; 29 M. L. J. 538 879

The explanation to section 25, Contract Act, provides that nothing in the section shall affect the validity, as between a donor and donee, of any gift actually made. The same rule applies as between a donee and the persons claiming through the donor.

A plea of fraud will not be heard unless it is expressly and specifically advanced in the pleadings.

In ascertaining the value of a piece of land on which cocoanut trees have been planted for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a Court, the question whether it came under clause V (c) or clause V (e) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence as to whether having regard to the position of the land and the number of trees thereon the plot of land can be said to be a garden.

Assessment is not the criterion in determining the question whether a land is garden or not. Assessed or unassessed it will fall under clause V (e) if it can be defined as a "garden".

A few isolated trees on a piece of land will not make it a garden, but where a number of trees are planted on a particular piece of land which is well-defined and can be marked off from the rest of the land, that particular plot may be treated as a garden if the land is used for the cultivation of flowers, fruits or vegetables.

While the High Court will not generally interfere in revision where an equally efficacious remedy is open to the party by way of appeal it will do so where it would not be possible to put the parties in the same position in appeal as they would have been if the irregularities had been set right in the lower Court by timely interference. M. Once a Probate has been granted on payment of succession-duty in accordance with the scale of Court-fee then in force, no further Court-fee can be levied for granting a second Probate in respect of the same estate, if the scale of Court-fee has, in the meantime, been revised and raised.

Section 19-I of the Court Fees Act requires the fee chargeable upon a Probate to be paid before the order for grant of Probate is made; and so what constitutes "the full fee chargeable under this Act" must be determined by reference to the point of time when the grant of Probate is made.

The full fee chargeable must not be determined with reference to the point of time when the second grant is sought.

The expressions "under the Act" and "under the same Act" refer to the Court Fees Act and not the subsequent Acts amending the Court Fees Act.

It is the intention of the Legislature that when the full fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act on a Probate, at the time it is granted, has been paid, no further fee shall be chargeable when a second grant is made in respect of that property as comprised in that estate.

In England all second and subsequent grants of Probate and Administration in respect of property on which the full duty has been already paid upon a previous grant, are exempted from further stamp duty by section 3 of 41 Geo. III, c. 86.

When an executor to whom Probate has been granted dies, leaving a part of the testator's estate unadministered and a new representative is appointed for the purpose of completing the administration, there is no new succession, no new devolution of the estate and no fresh succession duty should be levied.

An order refusing to issue a Probate till a sum of money, which is not legitimately leviable under the law, is paid as succession-duty, refuses in effect the application for Probate and is, therefore, appealable under section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act. C. Under section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a Revenue Officer specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf has the power of revising any order or decision passed under sections 105, 105A, 106 or 107 made by himself or any other Revenue Officer. This power is not restricted to revision of the decision or order on the merits.

In a suit for correction of an entry as to rent in a furd revaz where the defendants belonged to different castes and followed different occupations and the rents payable by them varied accordingly:

Held, that as the furd revaz, if the plaintiff's prayer were granted, would show different rents payable by different classes of tenants, one suit with a Court-fee of ten rupees might be instituted against such of the tenants only as belonged to the same caste or followed the same occupation, and with respect to each class of tenants a separate suit ought to be instituted.

A Revenue Officer has the power under section 28 of the Court Fees Act to direct the payment of Court-fee in revision when no objection has been raised as to the same in the Court of first instance.

Where a second order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, did not state that there was again a temporary emergency and a continuing or existing insufficiency of the Police force to protect the petitioners in the exercise of their right:

Held, that the presumption was very strong that the order was passed merely in order to evade the provisions of section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the Magistracy were attempting to give themselves a much more extended jurisdiction than covered by section 144 of the Code and that the High Court had jurisdiction under section 15 of the Charter Act to interfere with such an order. M. --Dispute regarding some out of a number of plots—Rent half share of produce, question of—No question of share as between parties.

Where in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, it is found that out of a few plots of land there is no dispute regarding some of them as to what tenants are in possession and there is a dispute as to the remaining plots, and it is declared by the Magistrate that each party should remain in possession of the plots of which they have been respectively receiving the rents:

Held, that with regard to these remaining plots of land the Magistrate ought not to have passed any order in these proceedings in the absence of the tenants, because they might be very seriously prejudiced by an order in favour of one or other of the parties to these proceedings.

Where it is a question of dividing a hitherto undivided share, section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code may not apply, but where it is a question of rent and it so appears that the rent is half the share of the produce, but there is no question of shares as between the two parties to the proceeding, section 145 applies. After the accused in a case had been acquitted and the first Class Deputy Magistrate, who had disposed of the case, transferred from the District, one of the acquitted persons applied for sanction to prosecute the complainant under section 211, Indian Penal Code. The application was made to and granted by the District Magistrate:

Held, that although the cases pending in the Court of the transferred Deputy Magistrate on the date of his transfer were placed before the District Magistrate, either for disposal by himself or for re-distribution among his subordinate Magistrates, he never became the presiding Judge in the Deputy Magistrate's Court and, therefore, was not competent to grant sanction as he did.

Held, further, that for the purposes of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court of the Subordinate Magistrate was not subordinate to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge. C. MOFIZUDDIN AHMED v. BASANTA KUMAR GHOSE, 16 Cr. L. J. 640 464

In cases triable by a Judge with the aid of Jurors and of Assessors respectively, a joint trial for different offences is not illegal under section 269 (3) of the Code.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure authorising or forbidding a Judge to allow consultation between the Assessors: a Judge is entitled to have before him each Assessor's individual and independent opinion, and is not guilty of an irregularity if he refuses such consultation.

A Judge's omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the failure to put in evidence an Inquest Report, when that is material for the case, and his omission to mention the existence of enmity between the accused and the prosecution witnesses, when there is clear evidence to support it, are misdirections which vitiate the conviction. M. Per Sharfuddin and Beauchroft, JJ.—The joinder in one charge of two distinct offences of causing hurt to two distinct individuals is not an illegality which vitiates the trial but is an irregularity which is cured by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code.

The qualifying words "subject to the provisions, hereinbefore contained" in section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, do not refer to the entire Code that precedes that section but only to sections 529 to 536 of Chapter XLV where the section occurs.

Per Sharfuddin, J.—The first portion of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is not so imperative as to render a trial null and void if the direction enjoined therein is disobeyed. In other words, a disobedience of the first portion of section 233 is not an illegality which vitiates a trial but is a mere irregularity curable by section 537 of the Code.

Section 233 of the Code contains the general law, and the reason of it is that the mind of the Court might not be prejudiced against the prisoner, if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence.

A charge is a first notice, to the prisoner, of the matter whereof he is accused, and it must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intended to prove against him and of which he will have to clear himself.

What their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in the case of Subramania Iyer, 25 M. 61, is that if law expressly provides a particular mode of trial, a disobedience of that law vitiates the whole trial. It is doubtful if the framing of charges is a mode of trial but joint trial of charges as to distinct offences would be a mode of trial.

When two offences have been committed and either of them has no connection with the other they are distinct offences.

Although illustrations have no force of law they go a great way to explain the intention of the Legislature.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Per Beachcroft, J.—In the case of Subramania Iyer, 25 M. 61, the Privy Council did not decide that a defect under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, was fatal to the trial. They in effect decided that a disregard of the second part of the section, by joining charges beyond the limits specified in section 234, vitiated the trial. The general observation "their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity" must be read with the sentence immediately following it which limits its application to the case where charges are tried together which the law expressly says shall not be tried in the same trial. The words "mode of trial" in the general observation cannot have reference to the formal defect of drawing up one charge instead of two. The drawing up of the charge is part of the trial, but the words "mode of trial" have reference to the constitution of the trial.

The object of section 233 is two-fold: in the first place, to give an accused person notice of the charges which he has to meet, in the second, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another. Where the offences form part of the same transaction the law allows them to be tried together; in such a case the accused is not likely to be embarrassed or the Court confused. The first part of the section is designed to give the accused notice of the charges against him. The object is that he shall not be convicted of an offence of which he has not been charged. This object is not frustrated, and the accused is not prejudiced if the accusations against him are written in one sentence or on one sheet of paper, instead of in two sentences or on two sheets of paper.

It is open to question whether consent of Pleaders can validate a trial which is illegally constituted.

Where a thing is directed to be done and that thing is in effect done, but in the wrong way, the error amounts only to an irregularity and not an illegality.

Though a decision even of the Privy Council is an authority only for what it decides, the general remarks of their Lordships are ordinarily considered to have binding force in this country.

Reliance on cases decided under the Criminal Law of England is liable to mislead though such cases may sometimes be useful as illustrating principles.

Per Fletcher, J., (dissenting).—The causing of hurt to two different persons are two distinct offences for each of which there ought to be a separate charge. A failure to frame two separate charges is not a curable irregularity but an illegality which vitiates the trial.

The whole of the section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, is governed by the words "subject to the provisions, hereinbefore contained." Therefore a neglect of the provisions of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is not cured by that section and renders the trial illegal. C. RAM SUBHAG SINGH V. EMPEROR, 19 C. W. N. 972; 16 Cr. L. —Presentation of appeals—Rules of Practice of Madras High Court, Rule 1 (1) (f)—Presentation to Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

No special method is enjoined in the Code of Criminal Procedure for presentation of appeals. The question is one of administrative convenience; so long as there is an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, a Bench Clerk or one of the Judges, the presentation is not invalid.

Rule 1 (1) (f) of the Rules of Practice of the Madras High Court which lays down that application for the admission of appeals should be made before a single Judge, does not in terms, and is not intended to, deprive the Divisional Courts constituted for the disposal of criminal business of the right to exercise their powers in special cases.

The rule providing for the disposal of all applications by the Admission Judge is not intended to restrict the powers of the Benches constituted under clause 14 of the Charter Act. Such Benches have jurisdiction to hear applications and appeals in criminal matters.

Section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be strictly construed. Failure to conform to the section at any stage of the trial renders the proceeding illegal.

Clause (a) of section 537, which speaks of "errors in proceeding before or during trial", does not cover cases where the trial itself is defective.

Where a Magistrate frames different charges, but allows the evidence on each charge to be recorded at one trial, and does not discriminate between that which is relevant on each of the charges it is not a mere irregularity cured by section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but an illegality which vitiates the trial in its entirety.

Where no action was taken against the accused for over three years for an offence which he was alleged to have committed and when the trial did take place, it was conducted in an illegal manner:

Held, that having regard to the circumstances, a re-trial could not be ordered as the accused would labour under great disabilities. M. PUBLIC PROSECUTOR V. KOTTAPARAMBATH, 29 M. L. J. 101; 18 M. L. T. 95; (1915) M. W. N. 504; 16 Cr. L. J. 593 145

All that sections 337 and 338, Criminal Procedure Code, require is that there should be an offence that is triable exclusively by the Court of Session under inquiry or trial. The fact that there may be other offences alleged or charged which are not so triable will not invalidate the grant of any pardon.

The paramount object, in construing penal as well as other Statute, is to ascertain the Legislative intent, and the strict rule of construction is not violated by permitting the words to have their full meaning, or the more extensive of two meanings, when best effectuating the intention. S. Where no evidence has been given implicating the accused, the Magistrate has no right under the Statute to put questions to him or invite him to make a statement. A statement, therefore, made by the accused under these circumstances is not admissible evidence against him on his subsequent trial. M. ABIBULLA ROWTHAN, In re, (1915) M. W. N. 413; 2 L. s. 439 (3)—High Court's power to enhance sentence beyond power of trying Magistrate—Practice.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

In cases of convictions by second or third class Magistrates, the High Court has power to enhance the sentence beyond the power of the trying Magistrate.

The power of enhancement of sentence conferred upon the High Court by section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, is limited only by clause (3) of that section which clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrates under section 32 of the same Code but lays down the general rule that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under section 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that may be inflicted by a Presidency or a first Class Magistrate.

The practice of this Court to accept the conviction as conclusive and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on the basis of the facts found by the lower Court, would not be followed when it is proposed to enhance a sentence beyond the powers of the trying Magistrate. In such cases both the conviction and the sentence are open to revision. S. EMPEROR v. KAMAL, 9 S. L. R. 82; 16 Cr. L. J. 712 1000

A complaint was made before a Magistrate. The Magistrate without at once examining the complainant, sent for the papers of the Police investigation and summoned the accused and fixed a date asking the complainant to proceed with the case independently on that date. On the date so fixed, the accused appeared, but the complainant did not. The Magistrate discharged the accused. Subsequently on the same date the complainant appeared and explained the cause of his delay. The Magistrate again without examining the complainant fixed another date giving the complainant opportunity to examine his witnesses. Held, that there was no sufficient cause to set aside the conviction on the ground of irregularity.

Although the order of a Revenue Court, passed in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment, to the effect that A is an under-proprietor, is not warranted by the pleadings in the case, yet it gives a sufficient cause of action to the landlord to go to the Civil Court and seek a declaration that A has no superior or inferior proprietary rights.

The plaintiff sued the defendants in the Civil Court for a declaration that the latter had no right, either superior or inferior, in the village, and the defendants admitted that they had no such right but pleaded that they were perpetual thekadars in the village. The Court found that the defendants held the land under certain qubuliats executed by their ancestors in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff and were estopped from setting up a perpetual tenancy.

Held, that in view of the defendants' own admission and the provisions of section 233, clause (i), of the U.P. Land Revenue Act, the Civil Court ought to have passed merely a decree for a declaration that the defendants had no superior or inferior proprietary rights, but was precluded from going into the question as to the nature of the tenancy.

Held, further, that the finding of the Civil Court on the question of estoppel was also erroneous.

Decree, execution of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2, cl. (3)—Payment or adjustment, recognized, when certified or recorded—Judgment-debtor not to suffer for Court's negligence in making record.

It is plain from clause (3) of rule 2, Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, that a payment or adjustment shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree, unless it has been either certified or recorded. This does not require that the payment or adjustment must be both certified and recorded.

In clause (3) of rule 2 of Order XXI, the term 'certified' refers to clause (1) and the term 'recorded' to clause (2).

A judgment-debtor does not lose his protection, merely because the Court fails to perform the duty cast upon it, viz., to make a record that the payment or adjustment has been certified by the decree-holder. C. TABAK NATH SARKAR v. NATABAR MONDAL, 21 C. L. J. 632 45 prayed for a decree for rent. The defendant asserted that he and his predecessors had held the land adversely to the knowledge of the plaintiff for more than 50 years. The Court found that the suit land was situated within the ambit of the mal land of the estate of the plaintiff, but that the defendant had been in adverse possession of it for more than 12 years. The decree directed that the suit be decreed in part and that the plaintiff's alleged title to the property in dispute be hereby declared and that his claim for assessment of rent and for wasilat do stand dismissed.

Held, that the decree was self-contradictory, that the Court did not and never intended to find anything to the effect that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, that in face of the pleadings of the parties there was no room for any possible finding to that effect. C. —, suit to set aside, maintainability of—Jurisdiction, method of exercise of, challenge of—Denial of jurisdiction—Fraud.

It is not open to suitors, who have exhausted the remedies competent to them, and after final decree has been obtained against them, to institute a fresh suit, or series of suits, the object of which is to declare that a decree, competently and with adequate jurisdiction obtained therein, is not applicable to them, although they are named in that decree.

A challenge of the method of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction.

A suit for the rescission and destruction of a former decree of a competent Court can be obtained on the ground of fraud "practised on the Courts," but where fraud has been eliminated, the suit is a mere colour for a fresh suit on matters already competently settled by law. P. Section 57 of the Indian Divorce Act does not completely dissolve the tie of marriage until the lapse of six months after the decree absolute.

Where, therefore, a new marriage was solemnized within six months of a decree absolute for divorce of a party:

Held, that the marriage was not only void on the date when it was solemnized but also that the previous marriage was still in force within the meaning of section 19 (4) of the Divorce Act so as to give jurisdiction to a Court under section 19 of the Act to pronounce a decree of nullity. M. Where the purchaser at a revenue sale brings a suit to eject the defendants from the lands held by them, and it is found that the said defendants have been holding 3 cottahs and 7 dhurs as a lakheraj tenure from a time before the Permanent Settlement out of 7 cottahs 7 dhurs and 7 powas, the total area of the land in dispute:

Held, that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendants from the remaining 4 cottahs and 7 powas of land, in respect of which the defendants are obviously trespassers.

An entry in the thak map made about 60 years ago is admissible in evidence.

In 1793 the Government resumed all classes of invalid tenures but it did not think it necessary to resume lakheraj tenures of insignificant area.

Held, that that being so, the lower Appellate Court was entitled to presume that the disputed land was one of those tenures of insignificant area, which the Government did not think it worth while to resume and, therefore, to hold that the defendant's tenure was one dependent upon the estate of which it was a part. C. widow in favour of reversioners, effect of—Reversioner's right of redemption in widow's life-time—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 72—Improvements on mortgaged property, making of, mortgagee how far entitled to.

A mortgagee cannot go behind the mortgage to dispute the mortgagor's right to enforce redemption.

A vendee can surrender his rights as such by entering into a mortgage in respect of the property already sold to him, so long as there is no law describing the form in which the surrender is to be made.

A sale was effected in 1879 and six months later the vendor mortgaged the property covered by the sale to the vendee. On a suit for redemption having been brought in 1913, the mortgagee contended that the registered sale-deed could not have been cancelled by an oral agreement and that the mortgage in suit was fictitious and invalid for want of consideration. It was found, however, that the mortgagee did not set up any higher rights than those of a mortgagee at any time since the date of the mortgage and that the mortgage could not be fictitious:

Held, that section 92, clause (4), of the Evidence Act did not apply to the case, as prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act there was no law which required the sale of immoveable property to be in writing and as the mortgage-deed which evidenced the oral agreement rescinding or superseding the previous sale-deed was also registered.

The effect of a deed of release executed by a Hindu widow in favour of the reversioners of the deceased is to accelerate the vesting of the estate or, at all events, of transferring the widow's life-interest to them for life.

The reversioners of a deceased Hindu are entitled to sue for redemption in the life-time as well as after the death of the widow.

Section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act does not permit a mortgagee to make improvements at the expense of the mortgagor with the object of deriving greater benefit during the period of his enjoyment from the mortgaged property and to add the costs of the same to mortgage-money. O. ss. 33, 70—Statement made by witness in ex parte proceedings, whether admissible in evidence in subsequent proceeding of the case—Admission made before Registering Officer, if proves execution.

A witness was examined in a suit on a bond to prove its execution. The suit was decreed ex parte. At the instance of the defendant the decree was set aside and the case was restored to its original number. In the meantime the witness died. The "admission" referred to in section 70 of the Evidence Act is an admission in the course of the very proceedings, for example, made in the pleadings or by a party himself in his examination. The doctrine of lis pendens applies to execution sales as well.

A mere attachment of a property does not confer any title upon any one. It only prevents the property being alienated by the person to whom it belongs during the continuance of the execution proceedings.

Execution proceedings taken against a property during the pendency of a suit in respect of the same property and resulting in a sale of that property sometime after the suit is decreed, are proceeding pendente lite, which cannot in any way affect the rights of the decree-holder, although the property may have been under attachment from before the institution of the suit. O. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to res judicata are not expressly made applicable to execution proceedings.

If it is ever considered expedient to make all the provisions of section 11 of the Code applicable to execution proceedings, it should be done by the Legislature, not by the Judges.

If a judgment-debtor does not take exception to the amount, set forth as being due in an application for execution, he is not prevented by the rule of res judicata from ever afterwards raising the question.

The primary requisite for the obligation to give notice to the Police under section 8 of the Explosive Substances Act is not "serious injury to property" but an accidental explosion. If the explosion was designed, the obligation to give notice does not arise even if the explosion may have been attended with "serious injury to property".

The word "occupier" in section 8 of the Act refers to some one on the spot at the time of the explosion who must necessarily have become aware of the explosion.

Unless the omission to give notice is intentional, section 176, Indian Penal Code, does not apply. L. B. ZERI KHAN v. EMPEROR, 16 Cr. L. J. 622 446

A neglect to inform the Court of the fact that there had been a previous attempt at another stage of the litigation to get a personal decree, even assuming that the neglect was wilful, cannot amount to "fraud" which would entitle the plaintiffs to set aside the decree which was obtained by the defendants under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. A. RAMRATAN LAL v. Hindu Law—"Bandhu," meaning of—Mitakshara—Grandfather's great-grandson's daughter's son, whether a bandhu.

The word "bandhu" under the Hindu Law means a "sapinda" who belongs to a different gotra, that is to say, a "bhinna gotra sapinda"

Therefore, for the bandhu-relationship to exist it is essential that the person claiming to be the bandhu and the last owner must have been sapindas of each other. The sapinda-relationship extends to seven degrees on the father's side and five degrees on the mother's side including the last owner not for necessity - Widow's estate—Burden of proof Reversionary interest, whether liable to attachment in execution of decree against husband—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (m).

Per Wallis, C. J.—Even on the view that a widow can adopt with the consent of the sapindas in the absence of any authority from her deceased husband, the senior widow is one of the kinsmen whom it is the duty of the junior widow to consult. Failure to do so renders the adoption invalid.

An alienation by a Hindu widow of her deceased husband's property not made for legal necessity is valid only during her life-time.

An absolute estate vested in a widow becomes by her alienation for her own purpose (valid during her life-time) divided into two estates 1) a life estate enjoyable by the purchaser during her life-time and (2) a reversionary estate to be enjoyed after her life-time. The ownership of the latter continues in her as part of the estate which she inherited from her husband and is available to her husband's creditors.

Such reversionary interest does not come under section 60 (m) of the Civil Procedure Code and is not exempt from attachment where the judgment-debtor is not the presumptive or contingent reversioner but a widow representing her husband's estate fully and the transfer which would be made by the attachment and Court sale of the reversionary interest is not made by any contingent reversioner or of the rights of the contingent reversioner in execution of a decree against him but by the Court acting upon the judgment-debtor's rights and upon the husband's estate vested in the judgment-debtor (widow.)

The burden of proving as against a creditor of the husband or as against a reversioner that an alienation by the widow is binding on the reversioner is on the alienee. M. SEGU CHIDAMBARAMMA v. SAREDDI HUSAINAMMA, (1915) M. W. N. 577; 2 L. W. 952; 18 M. L. T. 391; 29 M. L. J. 546 101

It is open to a Hindu reversioner to file a suit for a declaration that an alienation by a Hindu widow is partially valid and partially void as against his reversionary rights.

The proper form of decree in such cases would be one declaring that the alienation should affect plaintiff's reversionary rights only to the extent to which legal necessity is proved and that it is otherwise invalid as against him.

Where the income derived by a Hindu widow is insufficient for her future maintenance, she has power to reasonably alienate property to provide for her maintenance. She is not bound to wait till she has incurred debts on her maintenance before being justified in making any alienation. A widow like the manager of a family must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers provided she acts fairly to the expectant heirs. S. MOTISING v. SOBHOMAL, 9 S. L. —Alienation by widow—Widow's power to alienate husband's properties in order to pay off his debts—Motive—Alienation, when can claim value of improvements—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51.

A Hindu widow can validly sell her husband's properties in order to discharge her husband's debts, but she cannot take advantage of the existence of a few debts to sell away her husband's properties for less than their value in order to get ready money into her own hands.

Where a widow alienates her husband's properties with the improper motive of preferring one creditor over another, that creditor is not entitled to profit by such fraud.

A person who cannot in good faith believe that he is absolutely entitled to the properties alienated to him is not a bona fide transferee within the meaning of section 51, Transfer of Property Act, and is not entitled to claim the value of improvements effected by him. M. The estate of a Hindu widow or daughter may be determined in various ways but an alienation in favour of a third party clearly does not have the effect of accelerating the estate and entitling the next reversioner to immediate possession.

Where there has been no relinquishment in favour of a reversioner, nor is any such relinquishment alleged which would accelerate the estate in his favour he cannot successfully maintain a suit for immediate possession of the estates.

A claim to a declaration of right is governed by Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act and the time begins to run from when the right to sue accrues.

A relinquishment by daughters of their right of inheritance to their father's estate does not amount to waste of the original estate to justify the Court in considering whether the estate should be taken out of their hands. A Hindu lady, in such a position has an absolute right and full power to alienate —Custom and general law—Mitakshara—Impartibility, custom of—Female's right to succession—Rule of primogeniture—Joint family—Separation.

Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes general law, which, however, still regulates all outside the custom.

There is no inconsistency between a custom of impartibility and the right of females to inherit, and, therefore, the general law must prevail unless it be proved that the custom extends to the exclusion of females.

The widow of the last holder of an impartible estate which descends by the rule of primogeniture is not excluded from the succession if her husband was in fact separated and died without issue male, and if no custom which would exclude her from succession is proved.

In a Mitakshara family an ancestral impartible estate, on the death of the sole holder thereof, devolved, according to the family custom of primogeniture, on the elder of his two sons, the younger becoming entitled to maintenance. Subsequently, the elder brother granted to the younger brother a mokurari patta of a part of the estate for his and his descendants' maintenance. It was proved that thereafter the younger brother built a new house outside the family dwelling, removed his family there and lived there separately from his elder brother and his family, that the younger brother constructed a wall between his house and the family dwelling, that he established in his new house a separate thakurbari and tulsi pinda and raised money on the mortgage of property granted to him and spent it on the marriage of his son's daughter, and that after the younger brother's death his son stated on oath in a criminal case that he was separate from the elder brother's branch of the family:

Held, that at the time of the death of the elder brother's only son who succeeded to the said estate the younger brother and his only son were separate from the elder brother and his son, and that the elder brother's son having died without male issue his widow was entitled to succeed to the impartible estate in question in preference to the younger brother's son. P. Held, that under the circumstances B and J were not liable to pay the debt.

Presumption—Managing member, power of—Liability of minor members—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 247.

In carrying on an ancestral trade, the infant member of an undivided Hindu family are bound by all acts of the adult member who is the manager, which are necessarily incident to, and flowing out of, the carrying on of that trade.

The power of a manager to carry on a family trade implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade and third parties in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property.

In the case of a firm carried on by an adult member of a joint Hindu family consisting of an adult and a minor member, the presumption is that the minor member is also a partner in the firm but the presumption is rebuttable. P. — Evidence, nature of—Self-acquired property, when becomes joint property—Nucleus of joint family property, accretion to—Son's liability to pay father's debts—Debts contracted for immoral purposes—Proof, nature of.

In order to establish that a certain property constitutes joint Hindu family property, it must be shown that the property falls within one or other of the three classes, viz., (1) ancestral property, i. e., property inherited from a direct male ancestor, (2) property acquired by the members of a joint family by or with the assistance of joint funds or by their joint labour, and (3) property originally self-acquired but afterwards voluntarily thrown by the owner into the joint stock with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it.

Hindu Law—contd.

Very strong evidence is required to prove that the property falls in class (3) mentioned above. Thus, it cannot be established that the property which had come to a father as self-acquired became the joint property of the family consisting of himself and his sons, merely from the fact that they lived together.

A self-acquired property obtained previously to an ancestral property cannot be said to have accreted to the nucleus of joint family property formed by that ancestral property, although it may be proved to have been voluntarily thrown into the joint stock.

General allegations as to a father's immorality cannot exempt the sons from their liability to discharge the father's debts, unless they prove that the particular debts in question were contracted for immoral purposes. O. NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. ABDUL HAQ, 2 O. L. J. 237 216

Later on the family separated. The question arose whether the branch from which a member had already separated was entitled to a full $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share or $\frac{1}{3}$ rd minus $\frac{1}{12}$ th:

Held, that under the Hindu Law the partition should be made rebus sic stantibus as on the date of suit and consequently the branch was entitled to a full $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share. B. PRANJIVANDAS SHIVDAL v. ICHHARAM VIJBHUKHANDAS, 17 Bom. L. R. 712 918

Will by Hindu in favour of grandson by daughter Condition of residence with testator, interpretation of 868

Rules of construction—Bequest in favour of daughter—Absolute estate, subject to the sheba—Charge on property—Testamentary power—Gift by Hindu widow having absolute power of alienation—Gift in favour of daughter's daughter.

In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with regard to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family, and it may be assumed that as a general rule women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate.

But where the property in the Will was the separate property of the testator, and the major portion of it was not ancestral, and his object was to make provision for his daughter who, though married, was too young at the time to have children:

Held, that the testator, a Judge's sheristadar, by conferring an absolute power of alienation on the daughter subject to the keeping up and maintaining the sheba, must be presumed to have intended contrary to the general presumption and practice of Hindus to confer an absolute right of inheritance on the daughter;

that the provision for keeping up the sheba was merely a collateral charge on the property in whosever's hands it may be and did not affect the absolute character of the gift; that a reversioner of the testator in face of the testator's daughter holding an absolute estate could not sue either herself or her heirs for administration of the property as trust property.

When their Lordships of the Judicial Committee speak of a general rule in connection with Hindus' knowledge that women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are able to alienate, it cannot be held that they meant a rule of Hindu Law, since the rule of Hindu Law with regard to gifts to mothers and daughters is the reverse.

A daughter being a person to whom the testator can, under the Hindu Law, give an estate of inheritance, if the Will shows that it was intended that she should have the estate of inheritance, a benignant construction is to be used even if the language is ungrammatical or mistaken as to name or description, or in any other manner incorrect, provided it sufficiently indicates what was meant, that meaning shall be enforced to the extent and in the form which the Law allows.

Hindu Law—concl'd.

There is no universal presumption with regard to mother or daughter that in every case the estate she takes is less than would be taken by a male.

Decided cases, too numerous to be now questioned, have determined that the testamentary power exists and may be exercised at least within the limits which the law prescribes for alienation by gift inter vivos.

There is no application of the English Law of powers to Hindu Wills.

In ordinary life-estates of Hindu widows, the gift of a widow would be taken not from her but from the testator, but where the widow, under a Will by her husband, has absolute power of alienation in derogation of the rights of the sole reversioner—her daughter who is only entitled to the residue—a gift by the widow in favour of the daughter's daughters is valid and a reversioner of the testator in possession of the property cannot plead his right as reversioner against a suit by the donees, who are also heirs of the testator's daughter, to eject him as a trespasser, even though the gift by which they originally obtained title should fail. C. Hindu temple—Dedication to public—Character of temple, inference as to, from particular acts and circumstances.

One S, the paternal uncle of the defendant's husband, built a temple in 1830 and dedicated it to Sri Venkateswaraswami. Idols were installed. Servants such as Archakas, Vedaparayanam and Adhyapakam office holders and others usually employed in public temples were appointed. There was no difference between this temple and other public temples so far as the performance of pūja and other services was concerned. Ever since it was built the temple was under the management of the defendant and her predecessors-in-title as dharma-kartas. The public were freely allowed to worship therein and perform vows, and there was nothing to show that the public had to obtain the permission of the dharma-karta therefor. It also appeared that when the temple lands had to be enfranchised, inam puttahs were issued in the name of the idol. Some lands were also given to the temple by a stranger to the family. There was also a Will in which the defendant's husband was described as a dharma-karta:

Held, that the above facts clearly established that the suit temple was dedicated for public worship.

Held, further, that the fact that the food cooked in the temple and offered to the idol was used by the defendant, that the temple servants rendered services to her also, that the Will contained elaborate provisions regarding the management of the temple, and that no accounts had been maintained by the defendant or her predecessors-in-title of the management of the temple properties, did not in any way derogate from the public character of the temple and were quite insufficient to prove that it was the private property of the defendant. M. Under section 12 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, the Government Advocate's certificate must be as to something decided by the Judge and there is no power to certify as to anything decided by the Jury; the Court dealing with the case on the certificate cannot deal with any other part of the case until it has determined that there is an error on the part of the Judge on some point contained in the certificate. A Court dealing with a certificate is not a Court of Appeal and is subject to limitations even as a Court of review.

An unanimous verdict of a Jury is bound to be accepted by the Judge and under section 305 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is only when the Jury

Per Jenkins, C. J.—A certificate granted by an Advocate-General under clause 26 of the Letters Patent should reflect his judgment and not mere surmise; it should be granted in the interests of justice after a careful consideration of all available materials; it should be in conformity, and not in conflict, with the statement of the Judge who presided at the trial; and it should formulate and give effect to the accused's real grievances.

The certificate of an Advocate-General is entitled to respect and whether he grants it after a careful consideration of all available materials or without doing so, once it is granted, the Court has to deal with the case.

The statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him is conclusive.

Culpable homicide may not be murder, (1) where notwithstanding the mental state it is sufficient to constitute murder, still one of the exceptions applies, or (2) where the mental state, though within the description of section 299, Indian Penal Code, is not of the especial degree of criminality required by section 300 of the Code.

It is erroneous to suppose that a case cannot be left to the Jury under section 304, Indian Penal Code, if the exceptions enumerated in section 300 of the Code are held not to apply in the circumstances of the case.

The Judge's duty is to determine whether any evidence has been given on which the Jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies, for that is a question of law.

It is not enough to say that there was some evidence. A scintilla of evidence would not justify the Judge in leaving the case to the Jury. There must be evidence on which they might reasonably and properly conclude the fact to be established.

It is for the Jury to say whether and how far the evidence is to be believed. And if the facts as to which evidence is given, are such that from them a further inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the Jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn or not. But it is for the Judge to determine, subject to review, as a matter of law, whether

The burden of proof of the existence of circumstances bringing his case within an exception is upon the accused who must support the exception by evidence giving a full and true account of the transaction from which the charge has arisen against him.

The conduct of a case by Counsel is not a negligible factor even in a Criminal Court, though it may not necessarily conclude the accused.

Where grave and sudden provocation was no part of the defence case in the Sessions Court nor is any direct evidence given at the trial of such grave and sudden provocation or of facts from which this exception can be legitimately inferred, the trial Judge is quite justified in excluding inquiry into the exception. In fact it would be an error on his part to lay down law as to a matter which is not legally and properly before the Jury.

Where a trial for culpable homicide is proceeding before a Jury, it is not an appropriate mode of laying down the law to discourse on all branches and departments of this complicated topic of crime. To do so is calculated to confuse the Jury and possibly to direct their deliberations into channels that have nothing to do with the case. The duty of the Judge is to lay down the law in reference to the case presented to the Court and the facts of the case, and not to perplex the minds of the Jury with considerations that are outside the legitimate scope of the inquiry.

It is the duty of the Judge to keep the Jury within proper limits, and for this purpose, to simplify as far as he can the issues fairly and properly before the Court and direct the minds of the Jurors to those issues and those issues alone.

Where there is no misdirection or other error as certified, the certificate is misconceived and the Court has no power to interfere under clause 26 of the Letters Patent.

Per Stephen, J.—If a Judge omits to draw the attention of the Jury to any matter a consideration of which might lead them to return a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, instead of murder, he commits an error, though the defence did not suggest the existence of any such matter.

In laying down the law it is the duty of the Judge to show how the law applies to the facts on the record.

The absence of any evidence as to the circumstances immediately preceding a homicide is not by itself a fact from which the Jury can properly infer that the homicide was committed under provocation.

It would be a serious error on the part of a Judge to put a suppositious case before the Jury, in order to establish the existence of grave and sudden provocation.

The propriety and not the possibility of an inference is the test by which a Judge should decide whether or not he should suggest a case for the consideration of the Jury on his own initiative.

But a Judge fails in his duty if he makes a case himself on which he thinks the Jury cannot properly convict. For to do so is to mislead the Jury.

Jury trial—contd.

It is the duty of a Judge to make a case for the accused on which he thinks that a verdict of not guilty may be properly returned, though the case has not been suggested by or on behalf of the accused.

It is the duty of the defending Counsel to make the Judge aware of any case that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused though he has not made it himself.

When defending Counsel hears a Judge omit in summing up, a point that he considers may be made on behalf of the accused, it is a dereliction of duty on his part not to bring the point to the notice of the Judge.

Per Woodroffe, J.—If there were 8 to 1 in favour of verdict of murder, there could not be in law an unanimous verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

A Court can and should consider a case in favour of the accused which he has not raised.

On the question whether an inference does arise in favour of the accused, the fact, that a particular defence has or has not been taken, may affect the significance of the evidence given.

In reviewing a case under clause 26 of the Letters Patent, the Court is not concerned with the merits of the case until it is established that there has been an error in law which opens out the case for the Court's judgment.

Per Mookerjee, J.—When the Court is called upon to review a case under clause 26 of the Letters Patent, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him.

In section 297, Criminal Procedure Code, the expression "lay down the law" does not signify "lay down the whole law on the subject irrespective of the facts of the particular case before the Court." The reasonable construction of the section is that the Judge should lay down the law, only in so far as it bears upon the evidence adduced in the particular case.

All unnecessary and extraneous discussion and argument should be avoided by the Judge, and the summing up should be strictly confined to the evidence adduced and the mode of application of the law to such evidence.

The mere fact that Counsel for the accused has failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case, cannot justify an omission on the part of the Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence; it would be the duty of the Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to such possible view of the case on the evidence, notwithstanding that it may have escaped the Counsel for the accused.

To determine whether there was or was not evidence to go to the Jury, regard must be had to the whole course of the proceedings in the trial Court.

Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection; those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood every summing up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the question which have been raised by the Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively.

Where no error of law is established, the Court is not called upon to express an opinion as to the propriety of the conviction and sentence.

Per Holmwood, J.—No error of law is committed by a Judge who refrains from directing the Jury as to exceptions which have neither been raised nor relied upon by the accused and have no basis in evidence on the record.

Where there is no evidence bringing a case directly within an exception it would be a misdirection to ask the Jury to come to a finding of fact on a hypothetical state of circumstances which do not bring the case within the exception as a matter of law. Indeed the Court must presume the absence of those circumstances. Section 55 of the Evidence Act is imperative.

It would be a most undesirable practice for Judges to put hypothetical defences not taken by the accused before the Jury and might cause serious prejudice to the accused.

Section 305, Criminal Procedure Code, is mandatory. If the Judge agrees with the opinion of the majority of the Jury, he shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion.

On a verdict of murder being given, it is not competent to the Court to take any verdict on the lesser charge of culpable homicide.

A majority verdict with which the Judge agrees has exactly the same legal force as a unanimous verdict, and if it be a verdict of murder, the Court cannot go behind it and take any further verdict upon the facts which have been found by the Jury to amount to murder. *C. The term "kasbatis" or "kasbatees" was used in the District of Ahmedabad, Gujarat, to designate dwellers in towns, whose lands were cultivated not directly by themselves but by ryots, to whom they let them, receiving therefor a rent in cash or in kind. They were, in addition, invested with certain powers of Government over their villages, including the management of village affairs.

The relation in which the kasbatis of Ahmedabad District stood to their native sovereigns before the cession of their territory and the legal rights they enjoyed under them, are, save in one respect, entirely irrelevant in determining their rights and relation to the new sovereign after the cession, inasmuch as after the cession of territory to a new sovereign when it comes to be a question of legal rights the contract with the new sovereign is conclusive and the rights against the old sovereign avail nothing. They could not carry in under the new regime the legal rights, if any, which they might have enjoyed under the old. The only legal enforceable rights they could have as against their new sovereign, were those, and only those, which the new sovereign by agreement express or implied, or by legislation chose to confer upon them. This implied agreement might be proved by circumstantial evidence, such as the mode of dealing with them which the new sovereign adopted, his recognition of their old rights, and express or implied election to respect them and be bound by them.

The annexation of territory is an act of State, and any obligation assumed under a treaty either to the ceding sovereign or to individuals is not one which Municipal Courts are authorised to enforce.

The kasbatis may have been absolute owners of their villages and yet the consideration of their ante-cession rights is beside the point, save so far as it can be shown that the Bombay Government consented to their continuing to enjoy those rights under its own regime.

The burden of proving that the Bombay Government did so consent to any, and if so, to what extent, rests upon the kasbatis.

The mere repetition by the Government of acts of grace cannot per se create legal rights to their continuance.

Prima facie a lease for a term does not import any right to a renewal of it, on the contrary, it prima facie implies that the lessee's right to the premises demised ends with the term.

Section 6 of the Ahmedabad Taluqdars Act (VI of 1862) does not apply to the kasbatis of that district inasmuch as they never were taluqdars in the true sense, they did not lose their ancient rights of ownership of their land by taking leases, and therefore did not suffer the injustice which the statute was designed to remedy.

Sections 68 and 73 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (V of 1879) plainly mean that a lessee, whether a true "talukdar", or a "thakur", "mehwassee", "kasbati" or "nail" is bound by the terms of his lease, one of which is that he shall only occupy for the term of years for which a lease for years is granted, and prima facie no longer.

As long as the tenant cultivates the land in the village he will remain. If he abandons or is ejected from the tenancy then, unless there be some special custom or contract to the contrary, the site reverts to the zemindar and the tenant who built the house at his risk has to remove his materials and vacate the site. *A. —Alienation, whether works relinquishment or forfeiture of tenancy—Land-cess, right to recover—Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1894).

Where a lease-deed contained the following clause: "If while without alienating the land, in any manner, I am enjoying the said land through posterity, I find that I do not require the land, I shall relinquish the land to you and obtain from you the value of the improvement which I have made thereon";

It was held that under the clause an alienation did not indicate relinquishment or forfeiture.

Under Act V of 1884, a landlord is entitled to recover land-cess from the tenant even where Section 4 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not debar a tenant from claiming that by agreement and custom he is not liable to pay rent for the portion of his holding left fallow.

A Court has no jurisdiction to allow the amendment of a plaint directed against a dead man into one against his legal representative and decide the suit as brought against the latter instead of the dead man. M. ARUNACHALAM CHETTIAR, In re, 2 L. W. 828 679

—Encroachment for land-lord's benefit Adverse possession 942

—Encroachment by tenant for his own benefit—Adverse possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 144.

A suit for declaration of title to land and for assessment and recovery of rent thereof is in its essence a suit for recovery of a limited interest in land.

Where the defendant has for more than 12 years repudiated the plaintiff's right to receive rent, under Article 144 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, the plaintiff has no enforceable title.

Encroachments made from the waste by a tenant, whether the land taken belongs to the landlord or to a stranger, are presumed to have been made for the benefit of his landlord, unless it appears clearly from some act done at the time that the tenant intended to make the encroachments for his own benefit and not to hold them as he held the farm to which the encroachments were adjacent.

As a general rule the intention of the tenant to make an encroachment for his own benefit must be shown at the time when the encroachment is made, but a subsequent severance of the encroachment from the demised premises may have the same effect, if brought to the knowledge of the landlord, although if the landlord is allowed to remain under the belief that the encroachment was held as part of the holding, the tenant might be estopped from denying it. *C. Muafi resumed—Ex-muafidars recorded as tenants on payment of privileged rates of rent—Dispossession of such tenants—Suit to recover possession—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 79.

Certain persons were recorded as muafi in respect of certain plots of land prior to 1833. In 1438 the land was settled with the zemindar and the ex-muafidars were entered as tenants on payment of a privileged rate of rent with a right of transfer in the holding. In the Settlements of 1861 and 1869, they were again recorded as tenants with a right of transfer in the holding. The tenants were dispossessed by the landlord from a portion of the land. They sued the landlord to recover possession in the Civil Court:

Held, that the ex-muafidars were tenants within the meaning of section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act and a suit to recover possession was not maintainable in the Civil Court. A. KULSUM-UN-NISSA BIBI v. DAURU NATH, 13 A. L. J. 857 552

Permanent lease with day of grace for payment of rent—Non-payment of rent—Forfeiture of tenancy, right to relieve against—Equitable principles, applicability of—Construction of Statute.

Where a permanent lease provides for payment of rent with days of grace on default in payment on the stipulated date and gives power to the landlord to re-enter when the rent is not paid even after the expiry of the days of grace:

Held, that default in payment of rent even after the days of grace does not work out a forfeiture of the tenancy and the tenant is entitled to be relieved against it and that the provision as to days of grace is only intended for the benefit of the lessee and cannot be made use of to deprive the Court of its power to grant relief.

Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent is merely a security for the payment of rent and relief should be given if arrears and expenses are paid and if the parties can be placed in status quo ante and the insertion of such a clause

Napier J.—By providing for a right of re-entry under the Transfer of Property Act for non-payment of rent in non-agricultural leases, the Legislature did not intend that this principle should be extended to other leases also.

The principle which guides English Courts of Equity in relieving against forfeiture of tenancy for non-payment of rent, viz., that the tenant, if not relieved against, should suffer enormous loss wholly disproportionate to the injury, applies also to India, and the provision in the lease for days of grace does not take the case out of that principle. M. A claim for use and occupation only arises where it is shown that the occupation was by permission or sufferance. No suit for use and occupation lies against a trespasser; the suit open to an owner against a trespasser is one for mesne profits.

The rule that a tenant may not dispute his landlord's title applies only to the title of the original landlord who let him into possession and not to that of an owner who has acquired the property by some title derived from the original lessor.

If a tenant disputes the title of the derivative owner who sues him for rent in a Small Cause Court in Lower Burma, due attention should be paid to the provisions of section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Attornment by tenant is necessary only in certain cases.

There is no bar to a suit for rent being amended to a suit for damages for use and occupation. L. B. MAUNG PO SHIN v. MOHAMED THAMBI 753

By its Resolution dated the 3rd November 1873, the Government had granted the beneficial interest in all waste lands within the Karachi Municipal District to the Karachi Municipality including the exclusive right of possession for ever, subject only to the right of resumption if required for a public purpose:

Held, that the possession of the Municipality was not that of an agent or a servant of the Government but in its own right as a beneficial owner, and that consequently the right of the Municipality to possession was extinguished by adverse possession for 12 years under section 28 read with Article 144 of the Limitation Act. S. The dealings were of various kinds, entries had to be made sometimes to defendants' debit and sometimes to their credit. The last balance wound-up with the words baqi deone and it was contended for the plaintiff that they amounted to a promise to pay:

Held, that the words were simply equivalent to the English phrase 'balance due' and, though an acknowledgment, did not amount to a promise to pay and that, therefore, Article 85 and not Article 64 was applicable to the claim and that the mere fact that accounts were kept by one side alone was no sufficient reason for holding that the account was not an open mutual and current account within the meaning of Article 85. P. Sch. I, art. 93—Attempt to enforce—Unsuccessful attempt to have lease recorded under Record of Rights, whether attempt to enforce—Recovery of rent under lease, whether attempt to enforce.

In August 1908, a landlord applied to the mamlatdar of his District for recording a lease under the Record of Rights. The lessee challenged the document as a forgery, and upon this the mamlatdar returned it to the applicant without recording it. The lessor then applied to the Collector who, in August 1909, ordered the lease to be recorded. On the strength of that record the landlord sued and recovered from the lessee a part of the rent due under the lease. Within three years of that recovery the lessee brought a suit to recover back the rent he had paid on the footing of the alleged lease being a forgery.

Held, that under Article 93 of the Limitation Act, the suit was within time, inasmuch as the words "attempt to enforce" in the Article were applicable to the attempt to recover rent under the lease and not to the unsuccessful attempt to have it recorded. B. arts 110, 132—Mortgagor and mortgagee—Usufructuary mortgage—Lease by mortgagee to mortgagor—Interest charged on mortgaged property—Rent not paid—Suit for principal and interest on foot of mortgage—Interest, whether can be decreed.

On the 8th April 1896, the plaintiff obtained an usufructuary mortgage of items 1 to 9 of the suit properties and by a document of even date leased the same to the mortgagors. On 1st September 1903, he obtained an usufructuary mortgage of the same items 1 to 9 and a simple mortgage of items 10 to 19 in consideration of further advances, the mortgagors obtaining at the same time a fresh lease of items 1 to 9 from the mortgagee. This second document expressly made the mortgaged properties liable not only for re-payment of the principal but also for interest. In 1912 the mortgagee instituted the present suit on the foot of both the mortgages for sale of the mortgaged properties and for the realisation of the mortgage amount, including the interest due. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree for the principal and three years' rent.

Held, that the document of 1903 having made the payment of interest also a charge on the mortgaged properties, the claim for interest was governed by Article 13 and not Article 110, Limitation Act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the interest under the terms of the mortgage-deed irrespective of the fact that a portion of the properties had been

The plaintiff sued for declaration of title to land and for assessment of rent, praying also that for the years antecedent to the suit damages for use and occupation may be decreed. The defendant pleaded adverse possession for more than 12 years:

Held, that the suit was essentially for recovery of possession and was, therefore, barred by time under Article 144 of the Limitation Act.

If a person squats upon the land of another and if the latter accepts him as his tenant; either by express declaration or by implication, the squatter acquires the status of a tenant. But it is open to the proprietor to repudiate the tenancy and to evict the person who has come upon the land without his consent. It is impossible to support on principle the proposition that if a person occupies the land of another, it is open to the proprietor, any length of time afterwards, to treat the occupier as his tenant, although the latter has not given any indication that he intended to hold the land as tenant. C. Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, Limitation Act—(1908)—conold.

1908, should receive a fair and not too technical a construction so as to enable the decree-holder to obtain the fruits of his decree.

Clauses (5) and 6 of Article 182, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) are independent and exclusive of each other and the provision contained in the one clause cannot be imported into the other.

Therefore the mere issue of a notice under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1887, has the effect of starting the period of limitation afresh whether the application for execution upon which such notice was issued was one “in accordance with law or not”.

Where substantive rights are decided in an order passed in an execution proceeding; such decision is, no doubt, res judicata and subsequent applications are barred if the procedure under which such applications were made remains the same.

Where an order dismissing a previous application for execution was based on the view that the then existing procedure made it illegal for the decree-holder to claim the relief, that order will not operate as res judicata when that procedure is changed, and gives the decree-holder a right to claim that relief. M. Under section 26 (3) no pattahs, which have been granted by any landholder, at rates lower than the rates payable upon such lands or upon neighbouring land of similar quality and description, shall be binding upon his successor, unless bona fide granted for the purpose of making permanent improvements and unless the tenant shall have conformed to the condition upon which such lower rates were allowed.

The rule of law contained in sections 27 and 28 of the Act that the rent paid for the previous Fasti should be presumed to be fair, will not apply when it is fixed by an ex parte decision in which all the points upon which the parties were at variance were left open.

Where in a suit brought by a landlord to compel his ryots to accept pattahs on the amani system, the tenants contended that they were entitled to be assessed at a money rate of rent and denied the usage set up by the plaintiff to pay rents in kind and it was found that the arrangement to pay money rents was a purely temporary one liable to be given up at any time if the zemindar preferred to go to the trouble of collecting his waram:

Held, that whether the rates were high or low either party was at liberty to revert to their original contract or usage, shown to have been merely in abeyance during the years when the rents payable from year to year were uncertain and when temporary arrangements prevailed.

Madras Estates Land Act—conold.

Where rent accrued due to the plaintiff during his minority and he filed a suit for its recovery within three years from attaining majority claiming exemption from the bar of limitation under section 7 of the Limitation Act:

Held, (Seshagiri Aiyar, J., dissenting) that the right to sue had become vested in the plaintiff at the time of the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act and was not, therefore, barred having been kept alive under section 7 of the Limitation Act.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Where an Act contains provisions for limitation of suits which take away altogether a vested right of suit without providing any equivalent remedy, the provisions must be considered to have been enacted subject to the implied exception that they were not to extend to such vested rights of suit which were to continue subject to the rules of limitation in force at the passing of the Act.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—It is a well-known rule of construction that retrospective operation ought not to be given to a Statute so as to take away vested rights, unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment, and that except in special cases the new law ought to be construed so as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights.

A Statute of Limitation ceases to be a Statute of mere procedure where it shortens the period and is sought to be used to defeat causes of action which had accrued earlier than the length of time prescribed in the new law.

Though laws affecting limitation might abridge or enlarge periods of limitation in cases of suits or causes of action which were alive at the date when the new enactment came into force and which under the old law would expire afterwards, the change cannot, unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary, either by apt words in the enactment or otherwise, be retrospective so as to destroy rights of suit which were alive on the date.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A litigant cannot approbate and reprobate. He cannot claim the advantage which a new law gives without submitting to the restrictions which it imposes.

No one has a vested right in any rule of procedure. When a Statute provides for a new procedure for the enforcement of rights, it is always retrospective.

The Limitation Act in force at the time a suit is instituted governs the action and not the one under which the right accrued. M. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR V. GANI VENKAT SUBBA ROW, 29 M. L. J. 1; 15 M. L. T. 67; 2 L. W. 661; (1915) M. W. N. 547

Where the inamdars of Varakanarasimhapuram utilised the water of the Vamsadhara river, flowing in the Mobagam channel belonging to the zemindar of Urlam, for irrigating second crop cultivation and wet crops grown on dry land:

Held, per Oldfield and Bakewell, JJ. (Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dissenting) that under the combined operation of the Madras Acts III of 1905 and VII of 1865, the Government was entitled to levy water-cess for the same.

Per Oldfield, J.—Madras Act III of 1905, being a declaratory Act, has retrospective effect.

A person who claims exemption from payment of water-cess under Madras Act VII of 1865 is bound to prove that the water used by him was not Government water but that of a zemindar or inamdar or a person claiming under him.

A grant from the Crown, unlike one from a private individual, must be construed beneficially to it.

Madras Act VII of 1865 applies not only to ryotwari but also to zemindari and inam villages.

Where by a Statute, the burden of proving a fact in issue is placed on the subject as against the Madras Irrigation Cess Act—contd.

Government, a Court will not be justified in presuming or accepting inadequately supported inferences in support of a grant of which direct evidence is wanting, out of mere regard for the hardship that might ensue owing to the difficulty of proving it after the lapse of several years.

Where a grant is alleged as founded throughout the Presidency in the same manner, the fact that in two districts its existence has been negatived by practice is against its validity in others.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A historical retrospect of the relations between the Government and zemindars and ryotwari tenants, and those between zemindars and inamdars and their tenants is of little importance in arriving at a true view of the provisions of the Statute and Case-Law governing their rights.

In construing a Statute considerations such as whether the Government could have intended to be guilty of so much harshness and oppression as would result if a particular Statute were to be interpreted in one way, or whether the Legislature could have intended such a sudden change in the law as would result from a particular interpretation, are of very doubtful utility and it is not legitimate to have recourse to such extraneous considerations, unless the words of the Statute are very ambiguous.

In deciding on the rights of Indian litigants references to the technicalities of English Common Law actions ought to be avoided as merely tending to confuse the mind.

According to Indian Law flowing water is capable of being owned.

The words 'river', 'stream', 'channel' and 'tank' in clause (a) of section 1 of Madras Act VII of 1865 are used in the sense of the collective body of waters which are called river, stream, channel or tank, according to the respective configurations of the receptacles.

The word 'supplied,' when used in connection with water-supply, does not imply a previous request by the owner of the land which is supplied with water.

So far as beds of non-tidal and non navigable rivers and streams bounded by zemindari and whole inam lands are concerned, it is too late to question the applicability of English Law that a zemindar who owns only one of the banks of a river is entitled to half the bed of the river along the length bounded on that side by his land. But in other cases, the Indian Common Law vests such rights in the village community as a whole within the village limits and in the Sovereign power as representing the community in other places.

Rules of evidence enacted by the Legislature come into force at once and must be followed by the Courts in deciding on the rights of the parties, whatever may have been the previous state of the law in regard to the proper presumptions and burdens of proof. Under Madras Act III of 1905, the Government starts with a strong presumption in its favour that all standing and flowing waters belong to it, but the presumption is rebuttable. The fact that the enactment was passed during the pendency of the suit does not estop the Government from invoking the aid of such presumption.

Section 2 (1) of Madras Act III of 1905 has not the effect of declaring plenary rights in standing or flowing water in favour of Government. The Legislature never intended by that section to give to the Government greater rights of ownership in flowing water than the principles of general jurisprudence would allow. Flowing water by its very nature can never be the absolute property of the Government or anybody else, though the ownership in a very real sense can be predicated of it as vesting in a person so long as the water continues to be situated vertically over land belonging to that person.

The right of distributing water among their ryotwari tenants is exercised by the Government as the Sovereign landlord. Where, however, they have parted with proprietary rights over the beds of particular streams in favour of zemindars or inamdars, it is impossible to hold that they retain proprietary rights over waters standing in tanks in zemindaries or flowing through zemindari lands, or in water flowing in all natural channels, or through artificial channels constructed with the knowledge and permission of Government and owned by the zemindar or inamdars, or in water percolating into zemind and inam tracts. M. Where properties are given by a person to his wife and children, or children alone, following the Marumakkattayam Law, the presumption is that the donees take the property with the incidents of tarwad property, including those mentioned; persons subsequently born into the tavazhi are entitled to be maintained, but not to claim partition, and an individual cannot alienate his share nor can it be attached and sold in execution of a personal decree against him.

Per Wallis, C. J.—Query:—Whether a gift with the incidents of tarwad property could be made to the mother and some of her issue only, viz., those by a particular husband?

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The rule against perpetuities cannot be applied so as to defeat gifts made to all the persons who can naturally form a joint Hindu family, the gifted property to be held as joint family property, or to the whole of a group of persons following the natural law of Marumakkattayam forming a natural tavazhi group.

The result of a woman marrying another husband and begetting other children to the latter is that there will be two separate groups in the same tavazhi, holding separate tavazhi property, the senior male in each tavazhi group being the karnavan of that tavazhi group.

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—It is not the giving of properties by a person to his wife and children that constitutes them a tarwad or tavazhi, but that if properties are given to a wife and children following the Marumakkattayam Law, they as a tavazhi hold those properties with the incidents of tarwad prop.

Where a mortgagor deliberately and voluntarily, without any deception, surprise, pressure, mistake of fact, or unfair dealing, agrees to pay a commission to the mortgagee, in short, where the parties are completely on equal terms when the agreement is arrived at, and pays it, the mortgagor cannot, in a suit subsequently brought by the mortgagee on the basis of the mortgage, avoid his liability for the commission paid.

"Penalty" may be defined as a liability agreed to by the parties to be imposed as a punishment, fair or unfair, on the party committing the breach of contract.

An agreement to pay at default simple interest, or even compound interest at the same rate as the simple interest, fixes the price for accommodation of money at an ordinary or at a progressive rate and does not contain the element of punishment or penalty; but an agreement to pay at default a higher rate of interest does contain that element.

Where a mortgage-deed contained inter alia (a) a primary obligation to re-pay the principal money in fifteen instalments with simple interest at 8 per cent. per annum payable six-monthly on balance due after payment of instalments due, (b) a secondary obligation to re-pay, in case of default of instalments, compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests on each instalment or part of an instalment not paid by due date, and (c) another secondary obligation to re-pay, in case of default of interest due, compound interest at 12 per

Held, that the stipulations (b) and (c) were stipulations by way of penalty within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act.

Where a stipulation in a deed is found to be in the nature of a penalty, the Court in assessing the amount of reasonable compensation must examine the evidence relating to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the execution of the deed.

No legal novation or modification of an existing contract is created in a case where one party proposes the novation but the other party accepts the proposal in a qualified manner.

Where a mortgagee agrees to have the existing mortgage-deed substituted by another on more favourable terms to the mortgagor, but never fulfills that agreement the mortgagor cannot subsequently claim the benefit of the terms of the deed that was to be substituted, if he had failed to sue the mortgagee for specific performance of the agreement within the limitation prescribed therefor by law.

A debtor cannot, by invoking in his aid the doctrine of equitable estoppel against the creditor, say that the creditor is bound, not by the terms of the contract entered into between them, but by those of another contract subsequently arrived at between the debtor and a third person for the purpose of paying off the existing debt, and afterwards broken off, unless the debtor can show that he was induced by the creditor to break his contract with the third person.

Where a clause in a mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee could not sue unless (1) the entire demand for two instalments for two consecutive years and interest for the principal on two consecutive years remained unpaid and (2) nothing was paid for two consecutive years on account of principal or interest:

Held, that the two sub-clauses were quite independent of each other, and that the right to sue did not arise unless nothing had been paid on account of principal or interest for two years.

Where an amendment of plaint is allowed, which is purely of a formal nature and does not in any way prejudice the defendant or increase his costs, he is entitled to no costs.

The amount awarded as reasonable compensation for breach of penal clauses in a mortgage-deed must be considered for the purposes of limitation as a portion of the mortgage-money, and can be charged against the mortgaged property.

A penal clause is not invalidated by section 74 of the Contract Act. It remains effective, but the amount awarded as compensation for its breach is left to the discretion of the Court up to the maximum fixed by the clause.

A Court is not in any way bound to fix the rate of interest from the date fixed for payment up till the date of realisation according to the provisions of the mortgage-deed, but in fixing it it ought to be guided by the circumstances of each particular case. O. Conditional sale—Payment by instalments —Mortgagee, whether can enforce security before expiry of term—Intention of parties—Foreclosure.

Mortgage—contd.

A suit for foreclosure can be brought for interest of an instalment of money secured by a mortgage by conditional sale.

The right of a mortgagee to enforce his security before the expiry of the term fixed for repayment of the whole of the principal, depends upon the intention of the parties as evidenced by the terms of the bond.

Where, therefore, a mortgage deed provided for payment by instalments in the interests of the debtor, and provided against failure to pay by a condition for compound interest adding that if the amount be not paid as stipulated, the mortgaged property will stand foreclosed:

Held (1) that the parties intended that there should be foreclosure only after failure to pay the whole amount in the manner stipulated,

(2) that a separate suit for the first instalment with interest did not lie. N. KARNIDAN V. MEGHRAJ, 11 N. L. R. 153 981

The sons of a mortgagor brought a suit in 1888 against the original mortgagees for redemption of certain mortgages and obtained a decree for possession of the mortgaged property conditional on payment of Rs. 3,404-3-0. This decree was never executed and the possession remained with the mortgagees as before. On the 18th November 1909 the present plaintiffs, claiming under the original mortgagor, sued for possession of the land by redemption on payment of the decretal amount. Defendants, successors-in-title of the original mortgagees, claimed Rs. 6,947 on the basis of the original mortgage-deeds and the lower Courts decreed redemption on payment of this sum. On second appeal to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that Court-fee was payable on the value of the subject-matter in dispute in this appeal, namely, the difference between Rs. 6,987, the amount fixed by the lower Courts, and Rs. 3,404-3-0, the amount which the plaintiffs were prepared to pay;

(2) that the previous decree not having been executed within limitation had become inoperative so far as the amount of the incumbrance on the land was concerned and a fresh suit for redemption was only maintainable on the basis of the original mortgage-deeds. P. A mortgagor cannot by any dealings with the mortgaged property subsequent to the date of the mortgage affect the rights of the mortgagee under the contract, subject to the condition that the mortgagor's power of alienation is not restricted. The assignee of the mortgaged property can, of course, take only subject to the incumbrance, and, if the property is sold or foreclosed by the mortgagee in proceedings properly taken for the purpose, the interest which the mortgagor may have created subsequent to the mortgage may be destroyed.

A lease granted by a mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage-deed, absolutely prohibiting alienation by him, cannot be declared to be void and inoperative as against the mortgagee, merely on the ground that it has been executed in contravention of the covenant against alienation, inasmuch as such covenants create only a personal liability between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. And the lessee acquires an interest in the equity of redemption and can claim to redeem upon that footing.

The grant of a long term lease, say for twenty years, by the mortgagor, subsequent to the mortgage, is a transaction prejudicial to the saleable value of the mortgage security and injurious to the interest of the mortgagee. However, the lease cannot on that account be declared to be totally void but holds good in every respect except as to the long period.

Where the plaintiff sues for a declaration that a long term lease is void and inoperative as against him, the Court can grant a declaration in a modified form to the effect that the lease is not absolutely void and inoperative, but only in so far as the long term is concerned.

A Court can bind a transferee pendente lite by the result of the litigation, even though his name be not on the record, if the fact of the transfer is admitted before the Court during the progress of the litigation. O. SYED HUSAIN V. BANK OF UPPER INDIA LTD., 2 O. L. J. 291 289

A second mortgagee in possession under a mortgage under which he was entitled to possession, cannot be lawfully ousted from possession by his mortgagor or by the 1st mortgagee or by a purchaser at a sale under a decree in a suit on the 1st mortgage to which he was not a party. The purchaser in such a suit, whether he is a 1st mortgagee or a stranger, does not acquire the rights of the mortgagor as at the date of the 1st mortgage but only those that subsist in him at the date of the suit.

Therefore a puisne mortgagee's suit for declarations that the decree and sale in the first mortgagee's suit was inoperative against him and that the purchaser was not entitled to disturb his possession, without asking for further relief is maintainable. L. B. MG. SAN BWIN v. NAGAMUTU 710

The question of the personal liability of a mortgagor depends upon the construction of the instrument in each case, the test being the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt.

Where the remedy provided for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt is transfer of the mortgaged property by way of sale to the mortgagee, there is no personal liability on the part of the mortgagor to pay. Nor can such liability be inferred from a provision in the mortgage-deed that in case of there being any dispute as to the title to the mortgaged property or in case of any defect in title coming to light the mortgagor would be personally liable, so long as no such contingency has arisen. Nor does a mere promise to pay the money within a certain fixed period import the liability, for such a covenant is entered into in every form of mortgage. O. NAZIM HUSAIN v. MAHABIR PRASAD, 2 O. Penal Code—contd.

An offence of robbery cannot be converted into an offence of dacoity where there is a simple allegation but not adequate proof on behalf of the prosecution that five or more persons have taken part in committing or attempting to commit the crime.

An approver's testimony is not sufficiently corroborated so as to base a conviction thereon by

(a) the accused's producing stolen property from a place not in his possession as such an evidence can be easily fabricated;

(b) the evidence of the witnesses alleging to have recognized the culprit at the time of committing the crime where his name does not find a place in the first report to the Police made by a person who had ample time before doing so, to discuss the matter with them (witnesses.) P. of trust—Dishonest act—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Intention—Presumption as to one's own acts.

A motor car was entrusted to the appellant under a hire-purchase agreement providing, inter alia, that the appellant "shall not, during the hiring, assign, underlet or part with the possession of the same in any way whatsoever." In violation of the agreement the appellant mortgaged the car for different sums to three different persons who were given, under their respective mortgages, either the right to recover possession of the car or to recover their moneys by its sale.

Held, (1) that the mortgage transactions amounted to assignments within the meaning of the hire-purchase agreement;

(2) that the appellant was guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust, inasmuch as he caused wrongful gain to himself by obtaining moneys on the security of the motor car contrary to a legal agreement prohibiting him from assigning any interest in that car, and he caused wrongful loss to the owners by putting in their way difficulties in recovering the moneys due from him to them and by subjecting their car to the risks of attachment and litigation.

To constitute the offence of cheating it is not necessary that the deception should be by exp in words but it may be by conduct or impliedress the nature of the transaction itself.

Where an accused, after his application under Order XXI, rule 83, Civil Procedure Code, had been rejected by the executing Court, induced the complainant to advance him money on the security of his house under auction, representing that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decree-holder, and paid the decree-holder out of the money which he had got from the complainant but afterwards intentionally neglected to obey the directions of the executing Court and took no steps to prevent the sale being confirmed, but on the other

(1) (a)—Duty of seller to disclose defects in title.

No concealment is dishonest within the meaning of section 415, Indian Penal Code, unless there is a legal obligation to disclose it.

Defects in title being defects in the property under section 55 (1) (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, there is no duty on the seller to disclose them unless the buyer could not with ordinary care discover them.

A, one of the several members of a joint Hindu family, sold certain land to a Municipality without disclosing that the land was mortgaged or that the other members of the family had a share therein. A received the price and executed a sale-deed containing the usual covenant about title and indemnity in case of any defect of title. A was prosecuted for cheating.

Held, that A was not guilty of any dishonest concealment of facts within the meaning of the Explanation to section 415, Indian Penal Code, as there was no legal obligation upon A to disclose the mortgage or the fact of his being a member of a joint family, the Municipality knowing that he was a Hindu. S. They were in possession of certain land formerly included in the Gujrat District but transferred under the operation of section 101A of the Punjab Land Revenue Act to Gujranwala District. Held, that the petitioners were entitled to be acquitted, for the transfer did not affect their proprietary rights and the transfer would not have justified their ejection otherwise than in the manner prescribed by law. P. Held, that as the provisions of sections 165 and 166 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not complied with, conviction under section 353, Indian Penal Code, could not be maintained.

It is of great importance that Police Officers in the discharge of their duty should receive the protection of such sections as 353, 333, and 332, Indian Penal Code, but in order to entitle them to the protection of those sections Police Officers must comply scrupulously with the provisions of the law, particularly when they undertake an act such as searching the house against the will of the accused. *A. ss. 297, 441—"Trespass" in s. 297, meaning of—Purchaser of land containing graves, if commits trespass by destroying graves—Purchaser, if acquires title in graves—Waqf.

The word "trespass" in section 297 of the Penal Code has not the same meaning as is attached to "criminal trespass" in section 441 of the same Code. It denotes there a wrongful act.

An act of a person who destroys or disturbs a place of sepulchre with the intention of wounding the feelings of any person, or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded is wrongful and amounts to a "trespass" within the meaning of section 297, Indian Penal Code, no matter whether the land in which the place of "sepulchre" is included does or does not belong to the persons who are guilty of the acts of destruction.

The sale of a khasra number containing graves does not and in law cannot pass to a vendee any proprietary rights in the graves which exist on that land at the time of the sale and the graves remain as before waqf property and so far as they are susceptible of possession remain in the possession of the persons whose relatives are buried in them.

Where, therefore, a vendee of a land which contains graves enters on the land and destroys the graves he enters not on his own property, but upon property which is waqf and which he cannot lawfully take possession of and his entry on the graves, for the purpose of destroying or levelling them is wrongful and amounts to a "trespass" on a place of sepulchre within the meaning of section 297 of Indian Penal Code.

In a conviction for the offence of dacoity the grievous hurt should not be made the subject of a separate charge and a separate punishment should not be inflicted for it as provided in section 71 clause (2) of the Penal Code.

Under section 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the statement of a witness before the Committing Magistrate will be evidence at the Sessions trial only when that witness was "produced and examined," that is examined as a witness and not if he is only cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination.

The specific common object of a riot need not necessarily be set out in a charge including section 149 of the Penal Code though it may be desirable to do so in a particular case.

A High Court will not interfere unless an omission in the charge has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

Of the two parts of section 149 (1) the common object prosecuted and (2) the object which the members of an unlawful assembly must have known to be likely to be committed, for the application of the latter portion there must be an expectation founded upon facts known to all the members, amounting to something more than a mere speculation.

Where the whole of a party setting out from a particular town must have known that the common intention was to commit dacoity, that the party was going heavily armed, that there was every likelihood of something occurring either on their way or at the scene of dacoity to interfere with their highly criminal plans, and that their deliberate intention was to use their arms whenever necessary, either to effect the object in view or to avoid the risk of capture at any stage in the adventure, every one of them would be liable equally with others for the murders committed for which they were prepared beforehand and which they knew to be likely to occur. P. Where a person, who finds his agricultural land in the wrongful occupation of another, elects to sue him in the Civil Court for possession and mesne profits, the Court cannot, while giving a decree for possession, refuse that for mesne profits on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy lies in the Revenue Courts under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. O. A Munsif was promoted as a Subordinate Judge and his successor finished the remaining portion of a trial begun by him and delivered judgment. An appeal preferred against the decision in that case came before the former Munsif who was Subordinate Judge. He heard the appeal without any objection on the part of the parties and decided the appeal:

Held, that the decision of the appeal was not invalid inasmuch as there was no statutory disqualification for a Judge to hear an appeal in a case in which he himself did not pass the order or decree appealed against though he might have partly tried the suit or proceeding in which the order or decree was afterwards passed by another Judge.

Where there is no Statutory or Common Law disqualification in the Judge of a Court an Appellate Court should not set aside the judgment of that Court on the mere ground that it might have been swayed by bias or prejudice.

Semle.—Mere bias or prejudice on the part of a Judge does not disqualify him in the absence of a statutory provision.

The appropriate course in such cases is for the party to apply to the proper superior Court to have the case transferred to another Court. M. VENKATAPATHI NAYANIVARU V. MAHOMED SAHIB, 38 M. 531. 430

Pre-emption. See BUDDHIST LAW.

Claim based on foreclosure of mortgage with conditional sale—Presumption that pre-emptor is suing for his own benefit—Plea of equal right of pre-emption, if allowed for first time in appeal—Owning land under building, if give status of land-owner—Vendee to prove improvements and produce accounts—Vendee, right of, to get price paid in good faith—Compensation for litigation and improvements, when allowed—Compound interest—Costs—Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), ss. 12, 16—Use of title by Pleader.

Unless the contrary is clearly established, it is to be presumed that a plaintiff sues for his own benefit.

A plea of the vendee that he has got an equal right of pre-emption with the pre-emptor cannot be raised for the first time in appeal specially where the materials on the record are insufficient to support it.

A person owning a plot of land under building is not a land-owner within the meaning of and for the purposes of section 12 of Act II of 1905, even if it is assessed with some land revenue.

It is the duty of the vendee or mortgagee to establish his claim for improvements by the most satisfactory evidence and production of accounts if any.

Section 16 of Act II of 1905 does not expressly allow a Court to award to vendees more than the market value or what they paid in good faith for the bargain, but the section is not exhaustive and equities are not excluded. A party who asks for equity must show that he has acted throughout fairly and honestly. So a vendee is not generally entitled to get compensation for litigation connected with the pre-empted property, but under special circumstances, he may be allowed to get it.

Compound interest is not interest on interest it is interest on a sum or sums which were interest, but which on default, etc., at once became principal.

When the vendee opposes the pre-emptor's claim on several grounds including inadequacy of the price, the latter is entitled to get his costs although the former succeeds in getting much more than what was offered by the pre-emptor.

A Pleader cannot arrogate to himself, if any, title which he is not authorized to use by any competent authority. P. SHAM SUNDAR V. HARBANS SINGH, 109 P. W. R. 1915; 71 P. R. 1915. 517

Principal and agent—Agency, termination of—Agent throwing up work and leaving place of business—Starting point of limitation—Re-joining work, effect of.

Where an agent throws up the agency and leaves his place of business, the agency is terminated within the meaning of Article 89, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. The fact that he subsequently goes back to the place, and does some business, cannot prevent the running of time as regards the first agency unless there is any acknowledgment of liability to account. M. I, Arts. 89, 115, 132—Accounts, suit for—Agent's immoveable property hypothecated as security—Demand and refusal—Termination of agency—Limitation—Agent's duty to submit and explain accounts.

Where an agent's immoveable property is hypothecated as security for the due discharge of his duty as agent, and his principal seeks to realise from him whatever sum may be found due on adjustment of accounts, by sale of the immoveable property hypothecated, the suit is one to enforce a charge on immoveable property within the meaning of Article 132 of the Indian Limitation Act.

An agency is terminated by the death of the principal and the agent does not continue to be the agent of the heirs of the deceased principal as he was before his death, but if the agent continues to work for the heirs a new agency is created by implication; and if under such new agency the parties agree that accounts should be submitted from year to year, a suit for accounts would be governed by Article 59 and not by Article 115 of the Limitation Act.

Where a principal's suit against his agent is governed by the second alternative provided in Article 89 of the Limitation Act, namely, where time runs against the principal from the date of termination of the agency, and a suit is brought within three

If there has been a demand for accounts and the agent has not responded to the call, there is, by implication, a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. If, however, the principal demands an account and the agent submits papers, there is not necessarily a refusal on the part of the agent to render accounts unless the agent fails to respond to the further demand of explaining the papers submitted by him.

When there is nothing to show that there was a demand and refusal, a claim for accounts would be governed by the second alternative in the third column of Article 89.

The duty of an agent when he is called upon to render account to his principal does not terminate merely by the submission of account papers; he is bound to explain those papers, and if, on accounts taken; it is found that he has in his hands money which belongs to his principal, he is bound to pay that sum.

If an agent for collection has submitted the collection papers to one of the several principals, he is under no obligation to submit papers, again to the other principals; and he cannot be held responsible for the production of the papers, if they are not produced by the person to whom they were submitted by him. But he is obliged to produce such papers as have not already been produced and to explain all the papers to the satisfaction of the Court. C. MADHUSUDAN SEN V. RAKHAL CHANDRA, 19 C. W. Prize Court—concl'd.

The Rappenfels, a German merchantship, sailed from Calcutta on the 2nd of August 1914 with goods consigned by British subjects to British as well as German merchants. War was declared between Great Britain and Germany on the 4th of August 1914. The ship was captured and was in due course condemned as good and lawful prize by the Prize Court in Ceylon, but was sent to Calcutta in order that the liability to condemnation of the cargo might be considered and determined by the High Court at Calcutta. The bills of lading of the goods were made out to the order of the consignors and were endorsed by them in blank and at the time of the capture of the ship the price was not paid and the bills of lading were still held by the consignors. The Crown maintained that they were liable to confiscation as the risk, not the property, was the test of liability to confiscation:

Held, (1) that in determining the question of liability to confiscation regard must be had to the property in goods and not the risk;

(2) that the sellers had not the idea of passing the property to the buyers at the time of appropriating the goods to the contract and that the property in the goods consigned, therefore, remained in the sellers;

(3) that under the circumstances the goods were not liable to confiscation. C. CARGO ex S. S. RAPPENFELS, In re, 42 C. 334 174

A reversioner under the Hindu Law has no present alienable interest in the property left by the deceased but he is substantially interested in the protection or devolution of the estate, and as such is entitled to appear and be heard in a Probate proceeding relating to the deceased's property.

Where an applicant for Probate chooses to make a statement as to the relations of the deceased, the information he gives to the Court must be correct and not misleading.

In a case where a Will is propounded which alters the devolution of property the District Judge should, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by section 69 of the Probate and Administration Act as to the mode of issuing citations, direct special citations to persons whose rights are immediately affected by the Will.

Where a Court misled by the untrue statement of an applicant for Probate did not direct the issue of special citation on a relation of the deceased, as it would undoubtedly have done if apprised of his existence:

Held, that the proceeding to obtain the grant was defective in substance, within the meaning of the first clause of the explanation to section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act.

If a person knowing what was passing was content to stand by and see his battle fought by somebody else in the same interest, he should be bound by the result and not be allowed to re-open the case.

Probate—concl'd.

Where a person has full knowledge of the proceedings and has capacity to make himself a party he is bound by proceedings to which he is no party and of which he has received no notice from Court.

Where in answer to an application for revocation by a person on whom citation should have been issued, it is pleaded that he did not intervene though aware of the proceedings, the burden of proof that he had full knowledge is on the person who alleges it, it is not necessary for the party who applies for revocation to prove not only that no special citation was served on him but also that he had no knowledge of the proceedings.

There can be no acquiescence without full knowledge both of the right infringed and of the acts which constitute the infringement.

A person cannot be barred of his remedy on the ground of waiver unless at the time of the alleged waiver he is shown to have been fully cognizant of his right and of the facts of the case.

during insolvency proceedings—Leave of Court, when to be obtained—Limitation Act (IX of 1907), Sch. I, Art. 182 Application for execution without obtaining leave of Court under section 16 (2) of Provincial Insolvency Act, if legal.

A obtained a money-decree against B and C on 10th April 1903, B and C were adjudged insolvents on 1st June 1910 under the Provincial Insolvency Act and by orders of the Insolvent Court on 17th November 1912 and 26th February 1913, respectively, their discharge was suspended till 11th November 1913. On 12th October 1914, A applied for execution of his decree against B and C relying for the purpose of saving limitation on a prior execution application by him on 7th June 1913 while the discharge of B and C remained suspended. It was contended on behalf of B and C that A's application of 7th June 1913, having been made during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings and the leave of the Court not having been obtained, was not an application in accordance with law and was barred by section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act:

Held, that the phrase 'pendency of the insolvency proceedings' in section 16 (2) must be construed with reference to the object of the enactment, which was to prevent a general scramble of creditors for the assets, that this object was achieved when the assets were collected and distributed in an orderly manner by the Receiver and that the final dividend having been declared and distributed before the 7th June 1913, the insolvency proceedings were no longer pending so as to operate as a bar under section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act:

Held, also, that as the leave referred to in section 16 (2) could be granted after the application was filed and would relate back to the date of the application, the Court might have received the application and then granted the leave, and that as the application also prayed for a relief that the Court was competent to give, it was in accordance with law. S. P obtained a decree against E. In execution of the decree he attached certain property of E and put it to sale. After the realization of the sale-proceeds, the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent:

Held, that P was entitled to recover his debt out of the sale-proceeds.

B brought a suit against E and attached certain property of E before judgment. He obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant. The property so attached was sold in execution of another decree and certain sale-proceeds were realized. In the meantime the Subordinate Judge had set aside the ex parte decree on the condition that a certain portion of the sale-proceeds would stand security for any decree that might be passed in the suit in favour of B. Subsequently the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent. Ultimately a decree was passed in favour of B:

Held, that B was a secured creditor and he was entitled to draw out the money which stood security for his claim against E. A. PARSOTAM DAS v. DAVID, 13 A. L. J. 893 779

The defendants executed an agreement in which they acknowledged the receipt of an advance to deliver certain goods within a fixed period and further agreed that on a breach of their contract they would pay damages to the plaintiff and return the amount paid in advance to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued and it was pleaded that his suit was barred by limitation. The agreement contained a clause to the effect that if any delivery were made the fact should be entered on the agreement itself or a separate receipt be obtained. No such entry was made and no receipt was obtained and the evidence produced by the defendants as to delivery was found to be worthless. The Small Causes Court decreed the claim holding on the point of limitation that Article 68 of the Limitation Act read with Act I of 1904 applied:

Held, that the decision as to the question of limitation was wrong, but that as it appeared that substantial justice had been done by the decree of the Small Cause Court, there was no ground for interference. P. SHER KHAN v. GOKAL CHAND, 171 P. L. R. 1915; 107 P. W. R. 1915 429

Suit for dues accruing to hereditary office in temple—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 86—Suit against Ruling Chief—Consent of Governor-General.

Where the plaintiff, a purveyor of a temple, sues for dues accruing to him by reason of his hereditary office and not for the value of goods received by the temple, the suit is not cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

A Ruling Chief cannot be sued in a competent Court without the consent of the Governor-General in Council obtained under section 6, Civil Procedure Code, whether he is a principal party or only a pro forma defendant in a case, inasmuch as the section makes no distinction between cases in which personal relief against a Ruling Chief is sought and others.

An appeal under section 102 of Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.) lies only in cases in which a question of right to enhance or vary the rent of a raiyat or tenant or any question relating to a title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto has been determined by the judgment.

No appeal lies under section 102 in cases in which merely a question as to the amount of rent payable is involved.

Section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides for an appeal in cases where there is a decision on a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant. Execution proceedings—Two inconsistent orders—Later to prevail against earlier.

A decree for possession of property and costs was passed against several persons. On an application for execution of this decree a compromise was entered into between the decree-holder and some of the judgment-debtors, who had been pro forma defendants by which the decree-holder admitted that he had no claim against these judgment-debtors. The decree-holder sold the decree and the transferee applied for execution against these judgment-debtors as well. They objected and it was decided that they were no longer liable. The transferee in another application for execution again joined these judgment-debtors and attached their property. They made an objection but they allowed it to go by default. In another application for execution against them they again made the same objection:

Held, that the later of the two inconsistent decisions in the proceedings must prevail against the earlier and that the objection was barred by the rule of res judicata. A. DAMABAR SINGH v. MUNWAR ALI KHAN, 13 A. L. J. 764; 37 A. F. 31 715

—Hindu widow, suit by, to set aside adoption—Suit dismissed on ground of estoppel—No oral evidence taken—Privy Council deciding on merits—Second suit by reversioner, if barred—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

A Hindu widow sued her alleged adopted son for a declaration that she had not adopted him and even if she had adopted, the adoption was invalid, as she had no authority from her husband. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit finding that the defendant had been adopted and the widow was estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption without trying other issues or recording oral evidence in regard to them. The High Court affirmed the decision. The Privy Council agreed with the High Court as to the factum of adoption but found on a consideration of the documentary evidence that the authority to adopt had been proved. After the widow's death a reversioner sued the defendant for possession on the same grounds as the widow had sued.

Held, per Banerji and Chamier, JJ., (Richards, C. J., dissenting) that the previous suit was a bar to the present suit inasmuch as a decree fairly and properly obtained against a widow in possession of her deceased husband's estate is, in the absence of fraud and collusion, binding on the reversionary heirs unless the decree relates to a matter personal to her.

Per Chamier, J.—A Court may refuse to summon witnesses or admit evidence, and, when its decision is subsequently relied upon as constituting a question res judicata, the Court trying the subsequent case cannot disregard the decision because it thinks that the Court trying the earlier case ought to have summoned the witnesses or admitted further evidence.

Per Richards, C. J.—It is very dangerous to place too much reliance on expressions used in giving judgments in other cases where the facts and circumstances were different. A. 13 A. L. J. 694; 37 A. 496

Shamilat—Sale of khevat land, whether includes shamilat—Intention of parties.

It is a question of the intention of the parties as to whether a sale of the khevat lands includes the shamilat pertaining to the lands, a determination of which depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

Where the ancestor of the plaintiffs in 1862 sold to the ancestors of the defendants his entire well with all the culturable and unculturable land attached to it, this being the only property he owned, and after selling it he migrated to and settled in another district, and the shamilat of the village being partitioned in 1905, the plaintiffs sued the representatives-in-interest of the vendees to recover that area:

Held, that the vendor having severed all his connection with his original village and having taken no interest during all these long years in the shamilat area, it was evident that he meant to transfer all the rights he possessed in the village to the vendees and that both the parties to the transaction intended at that time that the vendees should step into the shoes of the vendor. *P. defendant can rely upon—Bequest of property by Hindu father to son—Character of property taken by son—Ancestral or self-acquired—Suit for partition on behalf of minor—Proof of malversation not necessary.

A Will though not probated may be used by a defendant in order to contest the plaintiff's suit.

Where a Hindu father makes a bequest of his property to his son, in coming to a conclusion whether the property is taken absolutely or with the incidents of ancestral property, the terms of the Will have to be ascertained as indicating the intention of the testator and if there are no words indicating a contrary intention, the natural inference is that the father intended his son to take the property as ancestral property.

A minor member of an undivided Hindu family can file a suit for partition if there are circumstances which show that it would be for his interest to separate his share, and it is not necessary to prove malversation on the part of the adult members.

Where a Hindu father sets up a hostile title and denies the rights of his minor sons to any share of the joint family properties and is living apart from his wife with a concubine, it is the duty of the Court to safeguard the interests of the minor sons by declaring their rights and giving effect to such a declaration. M. In cases of infringement of trade marks it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that defendant's colorable imitation of plaintiff's mark did actually deceive any person or persons.

No right of pre-emption can be exercised in a case where the mortgagee in order to avoid pre-emption gets the equity of redemption by way of exchange and not by way of sale.

Where certain rights in land are given in lieu of a right of equity of redemption, neither of them is a "price" for the other within the meaning of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. O. LACHMAN PRASAD V. FIDA HUSSAIN, 2 O. L. J. 220; 18 O. C. 109 232

Held, that the deed was a sale-deed within the meaning of section 54, Transfer of Property Act.

A mortgage, the amount secured by which exceeded Rs. 100, was executed by two pardanashin ladies. The ladies did not appear before the two attesting witnesses and, consequently, their faces were not seen by the witnesses. However, the witnesses were well acquainted with the voices of the ladies and recognised and identified them, at the time when the mortgage-deed was executed, by their voices:

Held, that the mortgage-deed was duly attested by the two witnesses within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In 1887 the two villages A and B were mortgaged to S. In February 1892 the village A alone was mortgaged to L. In June 1892 the villages A and B were again mortgaged to S with three more villages. In 1893 the village A alone was further mortgaged to L, who in 1896 sued on his both mortgages making S a defendant to his suit. In his written statement S distinctly claimed priority in respect of his mortgage of 1887. But under an erroneous decree, against which S did not appeal, the village A was sold, the proceeds of the sale were applied first in payment to L in respect of his mortgage of February 1892, and the balance was paid to S, though it was insufficient to satisfy the mortgage of 1887. As L's mortgage of 1893 remained entirely unsatisfied, L obtained a decree, under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, in execution whereof the village B was sold and was purchased by P in 1904. In defence to a suit by S it was contended by P, that as S did not, by an appeal against the first decree of L, insist on his priority under the mortgage of 1887, the village B was relieved of all liability in respect of that mortgage.

Transfer of Property Act—contd.

Held, (overruling L's contention) that the fact that S did not insist on his priority did not affect his claim against the village B. P. C. PADARATH HALWAI v. RAM NARAIN UPADHIA, 13 A. L. Under the terms of a mortgage-deed, if the interest for four six-monthly instalments was not paid in full or if the entire amount due on the mortgage was not satisfied on a certain specified date, the mortgagee was to be given possession over the mortgaged property for a certain fixed term and redemption was not to take place until the mortgagee had remained in possession for that term. The mortgagor having occasionally paid something towards interest, but not having satisfied the entire amount on the specified date as agreed upon, the mortgagee brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor contended that the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage and that the suit for possession was, therefore, not maintainable; that under the terms of the deed the only remedy open to the mortgagee was to sue for the amount due to date under the terms of the mortgage, and that a decree should be passed awarding possession in lieu of the payment of the amount due by the mortgagor within the specified time:

Held, that the mortgage was not an anomalous mortgage as defined in section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, but was a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties were not to be determined by their contract as evidenced in the mortgage-deed.

Held, further, that the mortgagor could not obtain a right of redemption, which would have the effect of defeating the mortgagee's claim for possession, by obtaining a decree stating the amount which would have to be paid as a condition precedent to redemption, inasmuch as he had legally no right to redeem otherwise than what he had agreed upon under the terms of the mortgage-deed.

Held, lastly, that the decree for possession would not affect any right of redemption exercised in the manner provided by law before the delivery of possession. O. MUHAMMAD SHER KHAN V. SWAMI DAYAL, 2 O. L. J. 372; 18 O. C. 105 377

Held (1) that the testator excluded his son from participation in the property dealt with by the Will;

(2) that the son's wife took for life with a power of disposition in her life-time but not by Will;

(3) that the survivor of the son's daughters named in the Will took a vested interest in the whole residue which was both heritable and transferable. B. MAFATLAL MOTILAL V. KANIALAL TRIKAM-LAL, 17 Bom. L. R. 705 915

—, Probate of—Creditor, locus standi of, to come in Probate proceeding.

A died on 17th January 1892, leaving a Will dated 28th December 1887. By that Will he left his property to his wife, B, for life, and after her death to his daughter-in-law C, for her life, and after her death the male children that should be born to his son, D, were, on attaining majority, to get the property in absolute right. No executor was definitely appointed by the Will, but the testator gave equal power to his wife and to his daughter-in-law and directed that, in case of death of one of them, the survivor of the two should continue to be in enjoy ment and possession in the manner stated above. B obtained Probate of the Will on 17th May 1894, and retained possession of the property during her life. She died on 11th June 1904. The appellant had obtained a mortgage dated 29th May 1904 and a bond dated 24th November 1905 against D and applied to be made a party to the proceedings:

Held, that the appellant had no locus standi to come in, as it was only in the event of a Will being put forward possibly to defraud creditors that a creditor would have locus standi to come in in Probate proceedings. C. AKSHAY KUMARI BASU v. PROSONNO KUMARI GHOSH 538
